THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

Carpenters and Engineers' Grievance Against Heurich Brewing Co.

GRIEVANCE COMMITTEE BUSY

Registered Drug Clerks Ask Indorsement of Bill to Regulate Practice of Pharmacy in the District of Columbia—The Secretary Directed to Secure "Record" for Body—Milk Wagon Drivers and Agitation Committee Matters.

The Central Labor Union met in weekly session Monday night, at Typographical Temple, President Hamerstrom presiding.

Minutes of previous meeting read and approved.

The International Union of Steam Engineers, Local No. 99, communicated relative to this body requiring the Chr. Heurich Brewing Company to live up to their contract with said local. Referred to Contract Committee.

The Washington District Council, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, also communicated relative to this same firm violating their contract and requested that said brewery be placed upon the unfair list. Referred to Contract Committee.

A communication was received from Kokomo Lodge, International Association of Allied Metal Mechanics, complaining against the attempt of the Kokomo Rubber Company to disrupt their union, and requested the aid of this body in their struggle to maintain their organization. Placed on file.

A communication from the Brotherhood of Painters, No. 368, relative to accepting the action of the Arbitration Committee of the Master Painters' Association and the Brotherhood of Painters, was read and placed on file.

The communication of the Baltimore Federation of Labor relative to the Hecht matter was referred to Retail Clerks' Union, No. 262.

The Grievance Committee reported progress.

Milk Wagon Drivers asked for a report from Agitation Committee. Chairman Pfau stated he had been to busy to call the committee together but would do so the coming week.

Registered Drug Clerks requested this body to indorse a bill to amend an act to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the District of Columbia, approved June 15, 1878. Referred to Legislative Committee. A committee was appointed at the request of the Drug Clerks to appear before the Committee on District of Columbia, at 10 a. m., Tuesday, in the interest of the above matter.

The Secretary was directed to endeavor to obtain the Congressional Record for the benefit of the Legislative Committee.

Two labor candidates have been elected to Congress from California.

An Appeal to the Young Men.

Young men, life is before you. Two voices are calling you—one, coming from the swamps of selfishness and force, where succees means death, and the other, from the hilltops of justice and progress, where even failure brings glory. Two lights are seen in your horizon—one the fast fading marsh light of power, and the other the slowly rising sun of human brotherhood. Two ways lie open for you—one leading to an even lower and lower plane, where are heard the cries of despair and the curses of the poor, where manhood shrivels and possession rots down the possessor, and the other leading off to the highlands of the morning, where are heard glad shouts of humanity and where honest effort is rewarded with immortality.—John P. Altgeld.

Behind the Footlights.

The unscrupulous malcontent in a labor union, glorying in his organization's affiliation with the trades assembly, and realizing the strength of the united body of working people, is often given opportunity to present and push through an apparently harmless resolution that, in its application, becomes unfair, selfish, inoperative and diametrically opposed to the principles upon which the foundation of unionism is constructed.

This thought is suggested by the recent attempt of the Stage Employes' Alliance to enforce what it is pleased to term its "home rule clause" which was framed with the idea of compelling employers to engage members of the local union in preference to outsiders. Theoretically it appears to be a rather reasonable restriction but, practically, it has proven a distressingly harmful and disastrous proposition, for should a local manager desire to engage a property man from some other city the new comer must first make application to the local union for membership even though he be a member in good standing in the jurisdiction from which he comes, and, should he be rejected, he can not be employed.

Ye gods and little fishes! Martinets and Dick Mansfields.

Why not tell the managers what attractions they should engage at their theatres, then go in the box office and count up the house for them? So long as your enemies (?) employ union men and they are drawing the scale set down in your by laws what matters it whether they come from Kalamazoo or Swamppoodle?

"Consistency thou art a jewel." The managers are all inclined to be fair with you and, in order to hold the support of the other branches of organized labor, you must be fair with them. While I am only one of the common horde—one who has had considerable to do with the theatre—and one who knows a thing or two about workingmen, union men—I want to tell you, gentlemen of the Stage Employes' Alliance, that some of your demands are unreasonable, so much so that the echo of them has already weakened your position in the ranks of organized labor and unless you get together and meet your employers on the level you will lose the entire support of the allied trades, without which your organization would be as ineffectual and useless as Castro's fleet of war ships.

This is not an official threat. I have no right to say any such thing officially but it is the pulse of the people on whom you depend for support. A hunch from the heart of labordom, a straight tip from the "O. P." side.

I am assured by one who ought to know that Mr. Chase has offered $25 a week for a property man and because there is not an available one in town, he is obliged to go without. Is that a square deal with a man who pays his employes more than the union scale and who employs none but union men? Mr. Rapley's stage carpenter refuses to join the union because of its antagonism to an employer who is willing to do everything the union demands within reason.

For weeks a committee from the central body has been concilliating the managers and the employes and have propounded a fair basis for an agreement, which the managers are willing to sign but the ridiculous and unwarranted restrictions proposed by the Alliance have thwarted all their efforts and prevented an amicable settlement.

It would be well for members of some other organizations to read this little screed and take so much of it as will dissolve in their watery grey matter.

HANDY ANDY.

LETTER FROM "KID" SHIELDS

A Newsy Communication From the Rocky Mountain City.

THE WASHINGTON OF THE WEST

Everybody at Work—Good Book and Job Scale—The Times—The Merger—Washington Boys in Denver—A Trip to the Home—The Eight-Hour Law Has a Big Majority—Interesting Chat.

By the courtesy of Mr. Bloomer we are permitted to publish the following letter from W. E. Shields, now a resident of Denver, who left as many friends behind in Washington as any printer who has ever left it, and who will be glad to hear of his well doing:

DENVER, COLO., Dec. 12, 1902.

FRIEND BLOOMER: I have been intending to write you for a long time, but the climate is so fine out here that one doesn't feel like staying in the house much. As I get about all my news of Washington through THE TRADES UNIONIST and your letters to the Journal, I feel that I ought to write to acknowledge appreciation of your kindness.

Although we got knocked out by arbitration on an increase of the scale, still we're in pretty good shape. All of our members are employed and nearly all the offices pay over the scale. The book office scale is the best I've run into—$20 and 8½ hours, and the hours will be reduced to 8 next year.

The Times (evening) was bought in by the News and it is the only instance of a consolidation that I know of where more men are employed than when the papers were got out in separate offices I had charge of the News proof room for two weeks, but was glad when the foreman permitted me to return to the Times, as I don't care for night work. I haven't felt a bad day since I have been here, and I have gained ten pounds, which wouldn't mean much to Joe Johnson, but it does in my case. I made no mistake in coming here, though, of course, I miss seeing the old friends. It was like getting accumulated leave money to see Patton when he was here. The boys here are a congenial lot, and the whole country is represented, so I feel at home.

Billy Foley is a star operator on the News and is in perfect health. Billy Waters, who came out here in bad shape about eight years ago, is working six nights a week in the adroom of the News. I expect Carlos Tomlin down here from Fort Collins in a few days; he writes that he's rounded to in good shape. Received an encouraging letter from Frank Cullen in Albuquerque the other day, and I expect him up here in the spring, so we'll soon have a Washington colony. Covington is here but I haven't seen him yet.

We had two printers on opposite tickets for the Legislature and Harvey Garman won. As one celebration of his victory, and through the courtesy of the Rio Grande, with which all successful statesmen are in touch, he took nine of us on a trip to Colorado Springs. It was my first outing since I came here and I enjoyed every minute of it. We had dinner at the Home and then went to Manitou, where we filled up on iron water, and to the soda spring. We went over the Home and the printers should feel proud of their efforts, for it is a model institution, and Charlie Deacon runs it on business principles. It must be seen to be appreciated; and when one sees the old boys snugly housed and every comfort provided, he is perfectly willing to have the Home assessment doubled, if necessary, to carry on the good work. There were 120,000 tourists in Colorado last summer, and it is safe to say that 100,000 of them saw the Home, from the car window at least, and it has given us as wide a prestige nationally as the Washington Temple has locally. A new story is to be put on the hospital, to cost $8,500, and when that is completed we will have a sanitarium second to none in the country. San Francisco and Denver have furnished a room each at the Home.

The only one of our boys direct from Washington was Jeff (Jack) Robinson, and the old fellow threw his arms around me and seemed so glad to see me that I felt homesick for the rest of the crowd 2,000 miles away.

George Hatch, who worked with me on specifications in the '80's, is at the Home, and so is Billy McEwen. I have no doubt if you had been with me you could have dug up a number of old acquaintances you used to train with in the '30's. Well, all of them seemed contented and appreciative of the fact that the union printers of America had provided for their comfort in their declining years. And, "Pard," as an atom in the mass, I felt happy at the culmination of this charitable work, as every printer must feel who sees it.

At the last political election the eight-hour law, as applied to mines and smelters, received a big majority; and also the bill for home rule for cities. So you see we are progressing. Denver is a beautiful city and the greatest example of an artificial oasis in the world. But what appeals to me more than anything else is the lack of squalor and misery so apparent in the crowded centers of the East. There are no "alley" houses here, and nearly all the houses here are of brick or stone and have plenty of breathing space. The school system is as fine as any in the country, some of the buildings being modeled on the plan of the newer ones of Washington. The cost of living is about the same as in Washington, and everyone here seems to be making enough to live on.

Labor is well organized, although at present there is a cloud in the sky on account of the fight between the A. F. of L. and the A. L. U. leaders for supremacy. Our union will probably withdraw from the fight as we don't want to be a party to the "scabbing" of our kind, no matter what brand the "scab" unions are marked. When unions are formed of men who stay in on a strike and the strikers are thereby beaten, it's about time to get out, no matter who or what is behind the movement. Well, I think I've written enough to give you an idea of how things are out here, 500 miles from the next nearest water tank, and if any of the boys feel all broken up or want to sprout a lung, tell them to come out and I'll do by them as if they were from Missouri, "show them how." But they must not wait until they have nothing to breathe with but their kidneys, for even Colorado's sunshine is not equal to a resurrection.

With best wishes to any friends who may inquire, I remain, your friend,

WILL E. SHIELDS.

George W. Bilyers has recovered from his recent illness and is back at his old place.

Ham Roy, better known as "Foxy Grandpa," will spend the holidays in Pennsylvania.

Edward Beyler has been presented with a bottle for Xmas. It is supposed to contain an elixir that will give new life.

Johnny Burns states that if he is presented with a Christmas present he will hand it over to the Civil Service Commission.

After a short illness William Gaisburg, of the Union Building, died Sunday at his residence, 1331 Vermont avenue. His funeral took place on Wednesday.

Alex Boyd had a dream the other night about one of the men, and the next morning went to his place of work to look him over. He was astonished to find the man all right.

J. O. Boag went to a banquet some time ago, and it is reported that he got his money's worth. He had his good old eatings, but old boy "Slats" is now under the care of a doctor.

Alderman E. H. Roberts, of Brentwood, promises some great attractions in that town next season, having engaged the following professionals: S. O Graser, wire walker; Julius Hulling, sweet tenor singer; J. H. Atkins, horse trainer; Julius Greible, German impersonations; E. H. Paudert, baritone soloist; H. R. Perry, molar expert.

Chicago labor men have applied for a charter for the United Labor party, and will nominate a complete labor ticket for the spring election.

The G. P. O. Relief Associations.

The main object of the various sick relief associations maintained by the employes of the Government Printing Office being to encourage these employes to provide for relief in case of loss of salary through sickness or disability, I take it that the better and more economically these associations are managed the greater will be their influence, and to a much greater extent will the "passing of the hat" be discouraged and a greater degree of self-respect be engendered throughout the establishment.

At this time of the year, when the annual elections are being held and the dividends paid, rumors are current of efforts in the larger associations to boost the salary of this or that officer, and dissatisfaction is expressed at the disparity in the amount of dividends paid. Some of this criticism is just and well founded; but the remedy is at all times in the hands of the membership. In my opinion the salaries paid for the duties performed by some of the officers are out of proportion.

The salaries of the officers of the G. P. O. Association, with about 1,000 members, foot up $460; of the Equitable, with about 700 members, $260; and of the Columbia, with about 400 members, $148 These salaries are becoming an object and the scramble for salaried positions is becoming quite active, largely on that account. There is no advantage, whatever, in a large membership in one of these associations. The G. P. O., with 1,000 members, is not more stable than the Progressive, or any similar association, with 100 members; but the large membership does seem to warrant a large corps of officers, and the efforts to put up the salaries have not been dormant by any means. The Union Relief Association was organized by the employes of the Union Building three years ago, and has been successfully maintained ever since. It has paid out as much relief proportionately as either of the big ones, and the dividends have been considerably larger. There is but one salaried officer, the secretary-treasurer, and he has been paid $25 a year. He has proven so valuable that the association has increased it to $50 for next year, without any solicitation from him, and I think that is about the limit—the members feeling that they are now paying a fair salary and the officer being perfectly satisfied. Taking into consideration the fact that collections in the Union are made bi-weekly, and that Mr. French performs all the duties that require two secretaries and a treasurer in the larger association, besides performing his share of the duties as a member of the governing board, I am fully convinced that the work of any one officer of a similar association is not in excess of his, and if $50 is a fair salary for his work these officers who are dissatisfied can be replaced by competent men without any serious result. The Union paid out this year for relief $930, and the dividend was $9.80; last year the dividend was $11.10, and the amount of relief was $630. The membership is now about 225.

At a salary of $75 a year I feel confident that the recording secretary of the G. P. O. is getting about $2 an hour for the work he does for the society, and the financial secretary at $125 is certainly being paid more per hour than he earns at his trade, and for no good reason that I have ever heard of, only that it is a big association.

I do not wish to be considered an advocate of low salaries, but I am fully convinced that some officers of the G. P. O. are paid fully $1 per hour for every hour's work they can possibly be called upon to perform during the year, and there are salaries attached to certain positions—notably the president, vice-president, and finance committee—that are considered honorary positions in all similar societies and are rarely salaried. And the same conditions exist, I believe, in the Columbia and the Equitable.

That good, healthy, and safe relief societies can be maintained in every division of the Government Printing Office more satisfactorily, more economically, and more successfully, the members of the Union and the Progressive (both are run and managed by the employes of the Union Building) can demonstrate, and to all the divisions that have any kick coming, my advice is to go and do likewise.

GEO. M. RAMSEY.

Printers' Entertainment and Dance.

The entertainment committee of Columbia Typographical Union is very busy these days getting ready for their annual entertainment and dance, to be held Friday night, January 2, 1903, at National Rifles' Armory Hall. Prof. Pistorio's orchestra has been engaged to furnish music for the dancing, while the program will be one of the best yet presented. One of the main features will be Mr. H M. Mills, a noted entertainer and impersonator, who will give two numbers. Mr. Mills has been for several years past doing Lyceum work throughout the West and the committee has been especially fortunate in securing his services. Mrs. Hattie Meads Smith, conceded to be the finest soprano in the city, and George O'Connor, who is in a class all to himself as a singer of coon songs, have also been engaged.

Mrs. Margaret Koontz Holland, contralto, Roland R. Rodrick, baritone, and Thomas L. Jones, tenor, will be heard in solos, while Sam Gompers, of the "Spess," will surprise the "profesh" by his banjo playing. Leo Ruhlman will give a juggling act in costume, and Harvel, the magician, will spring a novelty in his "turn."

Present appearances indicate a large attendance.

The Oyster Roast.

The Pabst oyster roast held last week was one of the most enjoyable affairs held in the District this season. Oysters were served in every style; an entertainment was also given by a number of talented young men from the G. P. O., including the Pabst Glee Club. The Mayor of Swamppoodle, Hon. Andy Gleeson, was introduced and spoke in favor of the improvements needed in the Poodle and the fine appearance of the new printing office. The following stars volunteered their services: Musical gems, Spellbring and Weidman; recitation, Theodore Hardy; spellbinder, Jack Walsh; specialties, Murphy Bros.; monologue, Finley Hayes; address by Captain Trimble; comic songs, Chas. Weston; poem entitled, "Andy Gleeson's Little Dog," by Wm. C. Connor; Bill Mullin's quartette, Joseph Dierken, John Sheehan, Bill Riley.

The C. M. Schwab Industrial School, erected and donated to the borough of Homestead, Pa., by the man whose name it bears, is completed, and the return of Mr. Schwab from Europe is all that withholds its dedication. The school cost $125,000.

At Toledo, Ohio, a movement was inaugurated at the meeting of the Central Labor Union last week, whereby the Central Labor Union, the Building Trades Council, the Metal Trades Council, the Allied Printing Trades Council and other central bodies in this city will join forces and operate under one head.

How is it that when they are most needed the Weather Bureau prognosticators are all at sea?

THE quietest, most obscure, and remotest spot on this or any other earth must be where that man is located who never made a mistake.

IT may come to pass some day that a real representative of Labor will be accorded a place as member of the President's official family.

IT is regarded as a compliment to speak of a man as too honest to steal. By this sign we may distinguish between the very rich and the very poor.

IN anticipation of what might happen, if worse comes to worst, it would be well for the poets of patriotic leanings to find a string of words to rhyme with Venezuela.

THE notion is fast gaining ground that the so-called "sacred rights" of capital have been overworked and that the plain every day rights of labor have been overlooked.

IF the meagre coal supply should endanger the electric light plant, as now seems probable, Washingtonians would not mind it so much, for we're about one-third dark, anyhow.

THE shop clubs act, just passed in England, makes it a criminal offence for an employer to make it a condition of employment that any workmen shall discontinue his membership in any society or union.

THOSE who now suffer from an insufficient coal supply will recall the assumption of one GEORGE F. BAER, who plagerized GEORGE III in his message to the "dear people," and over whom he exercised a sort of Divine supervision.

SINCE the politicians now recognize the labor problem as a proposition which calls for immediate attention, there need be no further evidence required to show that labor unions are now doing that which unorganized effort had so long failed to accomplish.

THESE columns are open for an explanation from those few who voted "no" on the proposition to unionize the Los Angeles Times. How any union man could thus vote and still claim fellowship with those who seek to advance union principles is beyond comprehension. Tell us all about it.

THE man who denies to others the benefits of good wages and better living by failing to co-operate in all efforts to make stronger the bonds of unionism and fraternalism, is of the same order as the man who is governed largely by the first name on a subscription for charity and sighs as he reluctantly attaches his own signature.

MRS. JULIA DENT GRANT, widow of General U. S. Grant, died on Sunday night last at her home in this city, aged 76 years. Mrs. GRANT excelled in those womanly graces which endeared her to a large circle of intimate friends, and her loss will be keenly felt by a grateful nation who appreciated and knew her by earlier associations and in times of the country's peril.

IN celebration of its fiftieth anniversary, the Evening Star issued on Tuesday a paper of 114 pages, with which was a fac simile of the first issue and a magazine of considerable bulk. The Star is a great newspaper, one of the great journalistic financial successes of the country, and is said to reach a greater percentage of the homes of its city than any other newspaper in the world.

IT requires twenty five tons of coal per day to keep things comfortable and to run the Capitol. Now we begin to appreciate the force of the late Mr. REED'S rejoinder when it was charged that the appropriations for a single session had reached the billion-dollar mark. "And this is a billion dollar country!" retorted Mr. REED with the air of one proud of the fact and with no apologies to offer.

IT was brought out by inquiry before the Strike Commission, on Monday, that the mine officials of the Continental colliery of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Company attempted at one time to organize a union in opposition to the United Mine Workers of America. The by-laws of a union organized by mining officials would make interesting reading. One may get an idea of a text for such a proposed compact by referring to Matthew, 4th chapter, 9th verse.

DRASTIC measures were employed and finally availed in case of the notorious Louisiana lottery enterprise. Now, if the government would turn its attention to the expert writers of the stock markets who regularly foreshadow "coming events" by confidential letters addressed to the unwary, and effectually stamp out the swindling industry, a greater public service than strangling the Louisiana lottery scheme would be the result. The use of the mails for purposes of swindling should not be tolerated, and if "Honest John" Wanamaker were now Postmaster General we are very sure he would drop his stocks and respond with alacrity!

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

"One of the most embarrassing things I ever had happen to me," remarked Jim Dumps the other morning, "was the result of not breaking a bottle as soon as I had emptied it, in accordance with the teachings of T. V. Powderly when he was Grand Master of the Knights of Labor. I had a very fine brand of whisky for my own consumption, and when a friend called one day I asked him to partake with me. On the sideboard were two bottles just alike, one of which I had emptied; the other had been but lately uncorked. Handing my friend one of the bottles, which, by its weight, was full, he poured out a good-sized swig and drained it off. Then he made a face and handed me the bottle. My wife had filled the empty bottle with vinegar, and I had gotten hold of it by mistake. Of course I apologized."

I assured Jim that, in my opinion, his friend was entitled to no sympathy, for any man who would gulp a drink of whisky so rapidly as to be unable to taste it until it was down was unfit to drink whisky or anything else but lollipops. He might as well have taken castor oil, and possibly with more beneficial effects. Whisky should be drank slowly—just permitted to trickle down the throat, and from half a minute to a minute is needed to get the full flavor of an ordinary draught. The gulper who only wants the effect ought to take some drug in a capsule and not be permitted to consume what he cannot appreciate. But the general effect of all whisky drinking is bad and not to be encouraged.

Jim Dumps ne'er bolts his "whisky straight,"
But drinks it slow and neat;
For Sunny Jim wants to taste "Force"
From gullet down to feet.

The Ladies' Auxiliary has not yet enrolled all the members it wants by any means, but additions are being constantly made to the membership of this most commendable and admirable society, and before warm weather comes again it is expected to number several hundred.

Jane Dumps declared the Ladies' Aux.
She never would go in;
Her mind was changed, but not by "Force,"
And now she's Sunny Jin.

* * * *

"Have you ever worked on Spess?" asked my friend Jim Dumps the other day.

"Once or twice in the long 'way-back," I answered.

"Well, you were lucky to get away from it, and if you're wise you'll stay away," said he. "It's the worst bug-house printing I know of. I believe most of the fellows up there who have been there any length of time are a little touched. They show it in their manner. I was walking downstairs one evening, and a fellow ahead of me was talking to himself—nobody else near, and I know he wasn't speaking to me: "If I only had some lower-case u's I'd have a bully case,' he said. Their manias and idiosyncracies take most fantastic forms. While at work one will bray like an ass, to be answered from somebody else with the whinny of a horse. A dog barks vociferously, a cat mews plaintively or spits viciously, a lion roars ferociously, a bear growls carnivorously, a cow moos lugubriously and a pig squeals piteously—all these without any apparent concert of action, but merely as an expression of condition of mind, attracting no attention, but taken as a matter of course. People who have served as attendants at St. Elizabeth's seem perfectly at home when detailed to Spess—in fact, they bring many messages from old Spess hands in that institution to friends who have not yet gone over. Funeral dirges and Misereres seem to be the popular music there, with 'Flee as a Bird' as a prime favorite on which they all take out. Their outing pleasures are trips to cemeteries and tombstone works, and they sometimes compete in the composing of epitaphs. A specification for a new burial casket awakens the liveliest interest, and a passing hearse causes all necks to crane out of windows. Oh, it's the most cheerful place I ever worked in; but a little more would have fixed me forever. I got so I wouldn't speak to my friends on the street nor my family at home. If they ever send me back there again I'm going to resign and go to the Philippines—that can't be any worse."

Jim Dumps then stepped up to the bar—
Bonini's bar, of course—
And Sunny Jim once more became,
For booze to him is "Force."

* * * *

The talent engaged for Columbia Union's entertainment on the evening of Friday, January 2, 1903, is a guaranty of one of the most enjoyable affairs of the season. The vocalists are Mrs. Hattie Mead Smith, soprano; Mrs. Margaret Koontz Holland, contralto; Thomas L. Jones, tenor; Roland R. Rodrick, baritone; George H. O'Connor, coon songs, and Robert K. Benjamin, illustrated songs—all well known artists. H. M. Wills, impersonator, is one of the famous entertainers of the Middle West, now located here as teacher in a school of elocution. G. W. Harvel, the ventriloquist, is one of the best in his line. Sam Gompers, Jr., the banjoist, needs no commendation at my hands. Leo Ruhlmann, juggler, is a remarkably clever performer. O'Connor, coon songs and Benjamin, illustrated songs, are among the best in the business. Pistorio's orchestra will furnish the instrumental music. The programme will be begun at 8 o'clock and be completed at 10, when dancing will begin. National Rifles' Hall is where the entertainment will be held.

To see this show Jim Dumps will go;
It's programme he'll indorse;
Our Sunny Jim will hit the "Sym."
And one night cut out "Force."

* * * *

"Funny" Roberts the other night handed me a copy of the Norwich (N. Y.) Trades Unionist, published by (L. D.) Haight & (Adelbert) Frink, in one of the towns in which "Funny" organized a typographical union when he was in the employ of the A. F. of L. a year ago. There are a number of factories in the town, the employees of which are well organized, and the paper is prosperous looking and well printed. A. J. E. Hubbard, of our TRADES UNIONIST, and ex-Delegate John C. Macksey originated at Norwich, and it is believed that the latter acquired his taste for "knocking" at a large hammer factory located there.

Our Jim Dumps is a "knocker" bold,
And now we know the source
Whence Sunny Jim acquired his vim—
'Twan't altogether "Force."

* * * *

The few people who voted against the Los Angeles assessment must have felt powerful lonesome when the result was announced. I have no doubt that some votes would be cast in our union against indorsing the truths of revealed religion.

Jim Dumps announced he'd ne'er vote "For,"
No "Force" could e'er work him,
But voted right on Wednesday night;
That's why he's Sunny Jim.

* * * *

My good friend "R. Buckle" swells me all up by placing me in the category with Dickens, Irving, Hugo, Poe and others who have wrought for good by exposing vice in its true colors in their works. And they, too, had their detractors, as all great reformers have always had. But I shall not permit the carpers to swerve me from the work I have laid out for myself.

Jim Dumps may flaunt his ribbon white
In old Division Four;
"Force" would make him a Sunny Jim,
With constant cry for more.

* * * *

Don't you always feel a little "leary" of having financial transactions with those fellows who, having no bad habits and working every day, are always and eternally "hard up?" I do, for my experience is that they are the slowest pay and the hardest to get money out of of any men "on the dump." And, speaking of "the dump"—

Jim Dumps with glee blows in his cash,
And oft is broke, of course;
He's Sunny Jim with those he owes,

* * * *

My fellow-prohibitionist and cordial co-worker in the great cause, John Kiernan, was rejoicing with me the other evening over the fact that Lowell, Mass., went "dry" at the recent election, and we agreed that Johnny Greene will find it very irksome in future to spend his annual leave at his old home.

For thirty days he'd be Jim Dumps,
No beaker filled to brim,
Nor aught to drink save at the pumps;
No "Force," no Sunny Jim.

* * * *

"While my sympathies are with those who are trying to put down the liquor traffic," remarked Jim Dumps to me the other evening, "I follow a more radical course. I put down the liquor itself. When all the liquor is put down there'll be no traffic to worry about."

No dallying with the foe for Dumps,
No half-way course for him.
He'd down all "Force" without remorse
And come out Sunny Jim.

Daniel O'Connell clipped this item out of an Indianapolis journal issued about election time. It was under the head "State News," and the writer must have been dallying with something when he wrote it:

NEWCASTLE—The trial of William Briggs, who was killed by a fellow-workman of Pawnee Bill's show, in 1901, began in the Circuit Court yesterday. He escaped after the killing, but was captured in Kentucky.

The name of Colonel Slack, as chairman of the committee on speakers, met with applause and he was elected by acclamation to that important position. With this exception, the committees remain practically the same as last season.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES

Down Town.

Christmas. Cheer up.

Union meeting Sunday.

Work down town is on the rush.

Eddie Charles, of the Times, has a full beard.

Otho Doughty left to-day for the Union Printers' Home.

There will be a pink tea given by the Ark Boat Club Christmas week.

Secretary Garrett is able to attend to his official duties after his severe illness of the past ten days.

Francis (Mootzey) Benzler is going to observe Christmas by presenting each of his friends with a necktie.

James E. Fitzgerald, who recently left here for the Union Printers' Home, has written to friends in this city and is well pleased with the Home.

Cal Wyatt, of Pittsburg, Pa., made this office a pleasant call Monday. Mr. Wyatt is general organizer of the A. F. of L. and one of the best known printers in the country.

Under the auspices of Baltimore Typographical Union, No. 12, a largely attended meeting was held in that city, Sunday, at Hazazer's Hall, at which Dr. Jacob H. Hollander, professor of economics at the John Hopkins University, discoursed on the subject: "Political Economy and the Labor Question." W. B. Prescott, ex-president of the I. T. U., presided. This occasion inaugurated a series of such meetings to be given by the union there, the object being to instruct the public regarding the purposes of union labor. Columbia Union, of this city, could make movements in the same direction to a great advantage.

For $20 a Month.

Mr. Donath will sell homes on just those terms. Call or write.

Specification Scintillations.

Extremes meet whenever Austin DuGanne and D. A. Smith hold a pow-wow.

Major William H. Dodge, of the proof room, is with us once more after a brief vacation.

Frank McDermott successfully held down the important position of "property man" last week.

Our Mr. A. J. Arnold was recently elected Worshipful Master of Federal Lodge No. 1, F. A. A. M. The trestle-board is in safe hands.

William Howlin, of the ring alley, attended the funeral of the late Ed. T. Toner last week Tuesday, serving in the capacity of pall-bearer.

Ed. R. French, secretary treasurer of the Union Relief Association, was a very busy man last Wednesday paying off the anxious and expectant members of his association.

The December, 1902, volume of the bound edition of Specifications will be the largest volume of that publication ever issued, aggregating near 6,000 pages, and in the neighborhood of 30,000,000 ems of type.

James B. Rogers recently made a vicious attempt to belittle the dignity of our great and good friend H. F. Tompkins by asserting that he was a sockless compositor. Mr. Rogers should withdraw this unkind thrust.

Joseph I. Keefer is the recipient of letters from Senators S. B. Elkins and J. H. Gallinger congratulating him on his proposed plan of erecting an archway through the Patent Office building, thus opening up Eighth street for continuous traffic.

No. 11 is the lucky ticket winning the gold watch recently raffled for the benefit of B. F. Cullen, now seriously ill in New Mexico. When Chairman Hauer announced the lucky number three bogus No. 11's were presented. The watch will be held until the real ticket is produced.

Mr. James Groshon, one of the most popular bookbinders employed in the Union Building, recently came to work in what is reported to be a $50 overcoat. It is rumored that he was "next" in the recent December corn deal. This rumor seems to be true as he has leased a mansion on Brightwood Avenue Heights and is now having extensive alterations and improvements made on same.

"Jack" Childress is a good story-teller. His latest is that a certain member of alley 4, who bears the name of an ex-President, tried to connect with extra night work on the Official Gazette recently and was promised a "sub" sit. He immediately bought a 20 cent lunch at 4:30 p. m. and reported for duty to Mr. J. W. Carter. He was informed that his services were not needed as only "regulars" would be employed. We will not reproduce his language in print upon receiving this information.

It has been said "for ways that are dark and tricks that are vain the heathen Chinese are peculiar." This adage found an analogy in an incident which occurred here one day last week. For several months past T. H. Gosorn and P. J. Talbot have "pooled issues" on the milk question and resolved to use one bottle of milk each day, Gosorn being allowed the privilegs of dividing up the lacteal fluid. Now, Gosorn is a mild-mannered and mellow-voiced individnal, while Talbot looks "easy." Gosorn, of course, took the first half of the milk, thereby obtaining the cream and other desirable elements of the fluid. Last week Talbot discovered the cheat and suggested a reversal of the program. At present writing Gosorn is "standing pat." Moral: Beware of the man with the persuasive voice.

The scarcity of coal has been the topic of much discussion among the employes of this division. Through the efforts of Messrs. George M. Ramsey, F. H. Melick, Perry T. Grimes and others an organization has been perfected to purchase a car-load of coal directly from the mine operators. The situation is grave and the arrogance and impudence of such pseudo-plutocratic coal dealers as Wm. J. Zeh and others demand serious consideration and prompt action. Monopolistic greed and debauchery of human rights should stir the resentment of all believers in justice and fair play. The poet Wadsworth has aptly said:

"Slaves who once possess the glorious thought of freedom, in that hope itself possess all that the contest calls for—strength, sincerity, the scorn of danger and united hearts, the surest presage of the good they seek."

And thus the same spirit that roused Greece from a degradation of 2,000 years, that instigated the Boston tea-party, that established the French Republic and that caused a handful of Cuban patriots to kindle international interest in their cause, has, to a small extent, invaded the hearts of some of our employes and consummated a desire to overthrow the yoke of our local coal dealers. The movement inaugurated by the employes of this division should find accumulative interest in the breasts of employes of other divisions of the G. P. O. Should the first carload of coal received from the operators prove satisfactory, repeated orders will be placed and independence of our avaricious local coal dealers established. The originators of this idea are to be congratulated and should receive encouragement and support. Sic semper tyrannis!

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. VII. No. 28. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1902. Price, 3 Cents.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

The Legislative Committee and the Eight-Hour Law.

THE STAGE ALLIANCE MATTER

The Master Painters and Brotherhood—J Mangan Again Fair—The Musicians and the Raleigh Hotel—New York Stereotypers Communicate—Many Communications Received and Disposed of.

The regular weekly session of the Central Labor Union was presided over by President Hamerstrom on Monday night, at Typographical Temple.

Minutes of previous meeting were approved as read.

Credentials were received from Retail Grocery Clerks certifying George I. Able, Martin C. Graves, William Levitt, John C. Rodgers, and Alfred Fuss.

Woodworkers' Union No. 6, of Baltimore, communicated relative to the unfair attitude of Reinle Bros. & Salmon, of that city, manufacturers of show cases, bar and office fixtures, and requested this body to aid them in discouraging the patronizing of this firm in this city. Referred to Building Trades Section.

New York Stereotypers' Union, No. 1, again presented their grievance against the United States Printing Co., of Brooklyn. This communication was referred to Stereotypers' Union of this city, and the secretary of this body was directed to request said organization to again affiliate with the Central Labor Union.

The Legislative Committee was instructed to prepare a resolution relative to the Eight-hour bill, H. R. 3076, and forward a copy of said resolution to each Senator. This action was taken in obedience to request of communication from American Federation of Labor.

The communication from George Brown, barber, protesting against alleged unfair action of Barbers' Union, No. 239, was referred to the Grievance Committee.

The communication from Musicians' Protective Union, No. 161, requesting the indorsement by this body of their action in placing the Hotel Raleigh and the musicians employed there upon the unfair list, was referred to the Grievance Committee.

The Grievance Committee reported progress.

Horseshoers' Union No. 17, requested that the name of J Mangan be taken from the unfair list. Request granted.

Milk Wagon Drivers reported that the Agitation Committee had failed to meet, and Delegate Trittipoe was appointed chairman of said committee in lieu of Delegate Pfau, who was relieved.

The Granite Workers stated that work was being done by the National Mosaic Company for Mr. Lipscomb The secretary was directed to request Mr. Lipscomb to have National Mosaic Company employ union labor.

Painters and Decorators requested that their communication, which was placed on file at last meeting, be taken up and acted upon. Reguest granted, and communication was read and a motion offered "That the communication be placed on file and the Master Painters' Association and Brotherhood of Painters so notified. An amendment, as follows, was offered:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Central Labor Union the contract between the Master Painters' Association of the District of Columbia and the local Brotherhood, does not prohibit the latter from affiliating with the Building Trades Section, or engaging in a sympathetic strike, and that the same applies only to disagreements between the parties to the agreement named.

Resolved, That the sense of this resolution be forwarded to the Masters' Association as a reply to their communication.

The Stage Alliance stated that after several meetings with the managers of the theatres a contract had been entered into and the matter had been compromised and that contracts would be presented on next meeting night.

Friday, January 2, 1903, at National Rifles' Armory, Columbia Typographical Union will dance. Tickets, 25 cents.

EX-DELEGATES' ASSOCIATIONS.

An Interview Regarding Those of Philadelphia and This City.

"Before the I. T. U. last met in Philadelphia," said John W. Crowe, an old Philadelphia ex-delegate, now in the Third Division of the Night Bill Force, "we formed an Ex-Delegates' Association, and the day we entertained the convention was the feature of the week. We had but a small association, probably less than thirty members, and we levied an assessment of $25——"

"Twenty-five dollars!" I screamed. "Twenty-five dollars a head? Why, you ought to hear the complaints, and even refusal of membership, here, over a dollar a month dues."

"Well, a few stayed out there, too, on account of the expense. We raised about $600 and with that we took the convention on an excursion to Atlantic City, with a dinner at the United States Hotel, and furnished bathing suits and everything to make the day pleasant. What do you contemplate doing?"

"Oh, the matter is in an embryonic stage yet," said I. "Some propose a trip to Mount Vernon and Marshall Hall, with a feed and amusements at the latter place. Some want to put in the day sightseeing at Arlington, Alexandria, Mount Vernon and Fort Washington. Another proposes a clambake, and that in a country where there are no clams, nobody who knows how to bake them, and nobody who will know whether they were baked right or not. Still another proposes to charter Glen Echo, take our own stuff there, give an entertainment in the big auditorium, with wrestling and boxing matches and a generally free-and easy time, sending the ladies off for a carriage ride, with a luncheon on return. I believe these are all the schemes I have heard mentioned."

"Is the association to be made permanent?" asked Crowe.

"That is not yet decided on," I answered

"After the convention was over in Philadelphia," said he, "we had a little bunch of money left, with which we gave an entertainment to the ladies of the members, and they were so delighted with it that they insisted on a repetition every year. This went on for several years until there was such a cry about our being a Wahneta association that we disbanded."

"And you didn't have Shelby Smith among you then, either," said I.

"Shelby Smith?" he queried.

"Yes. Shelby always insisted that an ex delegates' association is necessarily a Wahneta organization," I answered.

"We never attempted to interfere in the slightest with the business or elections of the union, but they called us Wahnetas just the same," said Crowe.

"A safeguard against such talk would be to have all meetings open to any member of the union," I suggested, "and if ours becomes a permanent affair, I am going to try to put that into its by-laws."

"You have a large membership," he said.

"We have over forty 'exes' from other unions besides our own," said I.

"I think I'll join you," said he.

"We'll be glad to have you," said I.

Now, did I interview Crowe, or did he interview me?

Who Is the Guilty Employer?

"Did it ever occur to you that to take a laborer's services for no recompense, as in the days of slavery, and to take them for insufficient recompense, as often done in the present day, are crimes differing only in degree?"

This little paragraph is chock full of common sense as well as valuable pointers to both the employer and the employe, not to speak of its righteousness.

I am not a union man or the son of one but I am not unfriendly to any who believe that the laborer is worthy of his hire.

I have had some experience—hard, instructive experience in this line—perhaps because I have never become attached to any one thing or a labor organization which, I believe, curtails a man's freedom and the walking delegate and organizer profits alone thereby.

Here, recently, I had a bit of experience in this line. A printing and publishing house advertised for a man to run a cutter. I applied for it, having had some experience with machines of this kind, and was satisfied with the agreement of $1 per day. Nothing being said concerning a union card, whatever, and I soon found out that this office changed union men about as frequently as it did others not so.

It is true I had some difficulty with the machine, its guard on one side was from one-eighth to one-fourth inch different from the other side and, though we used bits of pasteboard and furniture, we found that in cutting other than by the eye was risky and you doubtless know how risky that must be, especially when work has been cut once or twice before the same way and on the same machine. I asked to have this guage leveled and squared up and was told it would cost money, besides that it would be of no use as well, so, when rushed on several cart loads of pamphlets, a 100,000 job in runs, as dictated by foreman, things did not pan out any more satisfactory to me than to the boss. Next morning an old man, down to the very surface on his uppers, and willing to work for a bowl of soup, perhaps, came in and was put at work in my place and his work was well done and he earned his pay even if it were double the sum paid me. The errand boy had not returned—I think they have 3 a week, sometimes 5—I was told to look after the fires, to sweep and wipe and swab and pad and was sent on errands about every 15 or 20 minutes the balance of the time. I was to come early, 7 a. m. and not leave until all had left about 5 45 or 6, and I would have to go it on 50 cents per day as the boy was paid only $2 per week. Of course I got ready to quit and I was raised to 55 cents a day.

Seventy-five cents a day, $4.50 a week, is not small pay for a man with nothing in his pocket, for putting something into his grub pouch and getting a bed indoors out of the cold. Yet, when I got to figuring on $1 a week for my room and two 15-cent meals and a 5-cent lunch seven days in the week I found that if I took Christmas off or a part of New Year's I would have to go barefoot because of worn-out shoes, and very like a stoker because of handling the stoves and I couldn't see where my tobac was to come from so I up and quit and was told I could get the balance of my dues after the week was out, Monday.

I cannot see how such firms or men that use the union label can help organized labor by paying starvation wages, and if such labor unions are considerate of themselves they should put a stop to that sort of thing, and the sooner they do it the better. If there is one such here in Washington there must be many. If these men who take jobs of 100 m., etc, cannot afford to pay but 50 cents and $1 a day for workingmen who must eat and sleep and hold their respectability, they must hurt the craft by doing such work cheaper than they can consistently do it, all in all. From what I can see of these cheap printers they are dear. They cannot half pay their employes, the work is botched, misery runs along in every vein of the whole thing. Work is pretty scarce, some say, just now; yet the offices are overrun with work—both cheap work and men—men who must eat and sleep.

I ran into a man Saturday who does some die cutting at 25 cents a die, 24 sheets of paper and 24 envelopes for 25 cents. He says he makes 3½ or 4 cents on the order but it brings him other work. How this must cut into legitimate work every one must know. I bet that man does not pay big wages. He is satisfied to keep busy he says.

But this talk to you is a bore, I reckon I wish to the good Lord that you, whether you will do aught for a non-union laboring man or not, would keep this enclosed paragraph from your last week's budget standing and insert at least every now and then. It will do good.

COLUMBIA UNION'S MEETING.

Regular Monthly Budget of Matter Readily Disposed of.

Columbia Typographical Union met in regular monthly session on Sunday, at Typographical Temple, President Johnson presiding.

The reading of the minutes of the last meeting, upon motion, were dispensed with and the traveling cards received were read.

The Committee on Nominations reported favorably upon the applications of Charles G. Lohr for full membership and W. H. Jackson for apprentice membership.

Communications were read from Retail Clerks' Union giving notice that the firm of Hecht & Co. was placed on the unfair list of their organization; from Mrs. Margaret A. Toner expressing her gratitude for the kindness shown her and the memory of her husband during her late bereavement; from the Central Labor Union giving notice of several firms being removed from the unfair list.

A committee from the Retail Clerks' Union was given the privilege of the floor relative to Hecht & Co., and the matter was referred to its proper committee.

The Business Committee made a report upon the Sudwarth matter, and the report was concurred in. The committee also rendered a decision in the Globe chapel matter.

The Grievance Committee reported on many cases.

The cases of Charles H. Smith and J. W. Campbell, for admission to the Union Printers' Home, were favorably reported.

An appropriation of $100 for relief purposes was made upon request of Chairman Stelle, of said committee.

President Johnson reported the deaths of five members since last meeting, viz: Wilbur G. Brower, F. T. Maloney, Max Wasmund, S E Culverwell, and Frank M. Richardson. He also reported all efforts to unionize Darby's at present as futile. He also reported that from what he could learn the Los Angeles proposition had carried by an overwhelming majority throughout the country.

The Dwyer communication was referred to our delegates to the Central Labor Union.

Mr. Hall offered an amendment to book and job scale, paragraph 1. This, according to rule, was laid over and ordered printed on the call.

The Labor Press.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted at the convention of the American Federation of Labor held at New Orleans November 13-22, 1902:

WHEREAS, The labor press has been largely istrumental in building up the labor movement in all sections of this country where a labor paper has been established, oftentimes at the cost of much sacrifice, but which sacrifice has not been appreciated by many members of organized labor: Therefore, be it

Resolved, By the American Federation of Labor, in convention assembled, that we exend to the labor press our hearty sympathy and acknowledgments of the good work it has done and is doing, and we will call attention of all members of labor unions that it is their plain duty to render all the support possible, both financially and morally, to the labor papers.

The W. O. W. has 330,000 members. You know what this means.

Others may elect to follow, but the W. O. W. persists in leading, and lead it does.

CHRISTMAS BELLS.

I heard the bells on Christmas Day
Their old, familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet
Their words repeat
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

And thought how, as the day had come,
The belfries of all Christendom
Had rolled along
The unbroken song
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

Till ringing, singing on its way,
The world revolved from night to day,
A voice, a chime
A chant sublime
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

Then from each black, accursed mouth
The cannon thundered in the South,
And with the sound
The carols drowned
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

It was as if an earthquake rent
The hearthstones of a continent,
And made forlorn
The households born
Of peace on earth, good will to men!

And in despair I bowed my head
"There is no peace on earth," I said;
For hate is strong,
And mock the song
Of peace on earth, good will to men!"

Then pealed the bells more loud and deep;
"God is not dead; nor doth he sleep!
The Wrong shall fail,
The Right prevail,
With peace on earth, good will to men!"

More Defense for Bloomer.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

I have very frequently been agitated and greatly worried from time to time at what I regarded as the unjustifiable attacks upon the writings of Mr. A. F. Bloomer in your entertaining paper.

I have greatly appreciated the many stories and reminiscences with which the "Flotsam and Jetsam" column abounded, and in this I think I can also speak for all of your bookbinder subscribers, whom I have heard express themselves. I was, therefore, unable to understand why it was that he had, in some cases, such inappreciative readers.

But the scales have dropped from my eyes. I read what the Fourth Division correspondent had to say about him, and Brother Bloomer's reply. Then the thought stole over me, "What a chump I've been. Bloomer finds things running a little slow, so he gets some one to attack him in order that he may deliver such a pulverizing blow as he did to the gentleman aforesaid." And, upon further cogitation, I have concluded that was correct. Upon what other reasonable hypothesis can we justify these attacks? It is almost universally admitted that Bloomer's "stuff" is the best in the sheet, and, therefore, as a well-known attorney always says when arguing to a jury, "the inference is irresistible" that the whole business is part of a preconceived plan.

Let us have more of Bloomer and more attacks and further replies. "The end justifies the means."

Death of Samuel E. Culverwell.

Samuel E. Culverwell was buried on last Saturday afternoon, his death having occurred on Wednesday, December 17. Mr. Culverwell, who was 70 years old, was born in Baltimore, but was brought here at the age of 4 years and lived here until the time of his death. He learned his trade in the old Intelligencer office and remained on that paper until its suspension in the early '70's, when he secured employment in the Ordnance Office, War Department, where he remained until a few years before his death, when he was dismissed. For a few months he worked as a temporary employe in the Government Printing Office, when, at the request of an army officer, he was reinstated in the Ordnance Office. Mr. Culverwell was a delegate from this union to Richmond in 1872, his colleagues being J. M. A. Spottswood and the late W. J. Bennett. His associates of the Ordnance Office adopted resolutions of sympathy with his family in their bereavement.

Mr. Culverwell was a very quiet, unassuming man, and had been so many years away from the printing business that none but the older members of the union knew him.

Death of Max Wasmund.

Max Wasmund, a member of Columbia Union, No. 101, died suddenly at his home, 47 Quincy street, in this city, on Thursday night, December 18, of heart disease. "Moxey," as he was known, came to this city a short time ago from Baltimore and was employed on the Times. His remains were accompanied to the train Saturday evening by the Knights of Pythias, he being a member of a Baltimore lodge, and shipped to his relatives at Syracuse, N. Y., where the funeral took place Monday. The employes of the Times sent a handsome floral piece. His age was about 29 years.

Death of F. M. Richardson.

On Sunday night, December 21, 1902, F. M. Richardson, residing at 94½ Bates street, died of heart failure, aged 47 years.

Mr. Richardson was employed in the First Division of the Government Printing Office, as a compositor, at the time of his death

His remains were placed in a vault in Rock Creek Cemetery, Tuesday, and later will be removed to Ohio for final interment.

He leaves a wife and son, who have the sympathy of a large circle of friends and acquaintances, to mourn his loss.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1902.

Christmas Day Greeting.

Unlike any of the other days celebrated is that which marks the birth of the Child of Bethlehem and which commemorates the life service of One whose teachings have been an inspiration and a blessing to mankind.

The greatest of philosophers, sages, and prophets of all ages, to whom has been given the power of persuasive speech, all have failed when their life work is compared with that of the lowly Nazarene, and of whom it was said, "Never man spake like this man."

The common people—the lowly of the earth, who are acquainted with the varying vicissitudes of life or those to whom a sudden and terrible bereavement has fallen—these are they who with each recurring Christmastide are made happier by the reflection that it was such as they to whom He administered, and to whom He spoke words of consolation, when in the anguish of His soul and under the very shadow of the Cross there came from His lips the assurance of a better life awaiting—a life everlasting.

Stated as a truism, it may be said that all that is best in the sphere of human endeavor must have its origin in minds and hearts which most earnestly seek to know and do the right, and each endeavor to be the best must be in harmony with those higher motives which come as an inspiration from the Great Exemplar, who by precept and example has pointed the way to nobler aspirations and loftier attainments.

Remove from the world this CHRIST influence, if such a thing were possible, then Hope would disappear, Mercy and Charity would be unknown, despair would be written everywhere, and the natural man, unfettered, would enter upon a career of merciless subjugation, which would end only when the least powerful had become the actual slaves of the masters all powerful.

Prone as is the natural man to yield to those temptations which lead on to blind indifference of the rights of others, and cold and selfish and uncharitable as is the proven record, yet we must believe that the world is growing better, that the world of industry, as well as of morals, is being acted upon through that silent yet availing agency which began with that ministering service of the inspired Nazarene, who yet manifests Himself in the hearts and lives of good men and women everywhere.

THE TRADES UNIONIST extends greetings to all, and hopes by the aid of its friends and co-workers to be a useful means in helping to establish better conditions wherever its influence may be felt.

THE selection from Longfellow, entitled "Christmas Bells," and which appears on the first page of this issue, has special reference to the contest which ended with the civil war and with it the extinction of chattel slavery; but the lines have other and significant force if we may hope that Right will everywhere prevail and that yet there will come "peace on earth, good will to men."

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Those who were born last week, and then perhaps only because of misdirected zeal on the part of their parents, and who have no appreciation of "reminiscences," can jump this down to the next star line.

"Yorky" Rinehart has among his archives some relics of the Record in former days, and among them several rosters of the force. The following is dated July 10, 1886, and is the only one that is dated: "Record spikers"—W. R. Carrigan, McK. Jarvis, R. J. Shafer, George Saunders, Lincoln Kent, Geo. W. Graham, Samuel S. Culbertson, B. H. Pratt, W. H. Francis, John Doherty ("Skipper"—dead), W. N. Croggon, George S. Kauffman, George E. Hunt, C. W. Bridwell, I. S. Sternberg ("Izzy"), W. A. Spaulding, Will R. Buchanan, H. S. Sutton, E. A. Sullivan, George A. Tracy (chairman), George Hammar, W. L. Wilson (dead), A. Williams, H. M. Towner, C. K. N Schwrar (swift), Ben D. Ellis, David C. DeKnight (dead), E. Newbrough, James C. Sowers, J. R. Sturgis, G. A. Rinehart, George Gulick, W. C. Watson, W. T. Mills, J. F. Cummins, Andrew Bothwell, C. H. Shaifer, William Williams, B. C. Doty, J. A. McCarthy, Charles M. Brand, Ad. Arnold, John Delahunty, Howard Ferguson, W. M. Rodgers, T. R. Davidson, E E Schott, W. R. Chipley, H. E. Bartle, H. A. Keefer ("Dad"), John P. Sheehan (now of the noted place that was formerly John Raedy's), S. H. Daougherty, G. D. Ellis, E. N. Ash, Homer Melick, W. J. White ("Australian"), Robert E. King, I. A. Strauss, J. E. Reese, J. W. Snyder, R. T. Fahey, E. A. Dennis, J. B Haas, P A. Caton (dead), J. B. Rice, W. R. LeChevalier. Subs—W. E. Compton, A. T. Houck, C. W. Aughinbraugh, C. W. Harries, E. A. M. Lawson, H. E Faust, J. J. Lackey (dead), James T. Allan, L H. Middlekauff, E. P. Schueler, H. H. Stromberger, Henry Saloshin, H. C. McCracken, J. T. Waters, M. B. Whitehead, M. J. Hurley, T. J Shober, H. H. Buckwalter, W. C. Lambert ("General"), George Coe, E W. Davison, J. O. Honey, R J. Hale, Con. Ratcliffe ("Shorty"), G. C. McFadden, E. J. Malone, G. H. Eakle. It will be observed that several in this list of subs have since risen to fame I added a few notes in "parens" as I wrote these names, to relieve the monotony. The boys of the Record used to often sing "Riding in a Box Car," and to the song they added two doggerel verses of their own. It was printed with an extremely rude representation of a "Record bum" standing in a very disreputable box car. The added verses were as follows:

And now that Congress has adjourned,
No "railroads" more we'll see,
And "Bones's" pencil will grow dull,
While the Record will be free
Of all the bums and subs so gay
That were always ready to shirk,
While the poor forsaken creditor thinks
To h—— with the man that works.

CHORUS—

And now "Bones" Noyes with his curly "N"
Will try to get transferred;
But Bill Dunn says "it couldn't be did"—
Such a thing never was heard.
Charley Myers will read fanatic proofs
In the regions down below;
Old Wallace and he together will go
Where the wintry blasts don't blow.

CHORUS—

Ter-ra-rum!

It may not be necessary to add that Noyes (dead), Dunn (of the Post), Wallace ("Spess") and Myers (Columbus, Ohio) were proofreaders.

Bob Hale, who gave Ad Arnold a tight race for treasurer of the G. P. O. Mutual Relief a week or so ago, is an old Scranton (Pa.) boy, and as that town was a regular calling port for many of the roadsters and hoboes in the old days, he recollects all of them—Col. John Schoonmaker, Rus McQuillen, Ed Flanigin (who wasn't Irish because he spelt his name "gin" instead of "gan"), Fitzhenry, "Skinny" Hines, Harry Kimpton, "Micky" Camp, and others—and a "daisy" gang they were Colonel Schoonmaker, who sported a magnificent long black beard, was General Grant's right hand man during the war, and the General never made a move without consulting the Colonel—a fact admitted by the Colonel himself. One pay day the manager of the Times, A. A. Chase, had a party of visitors in his office, and as the boys trooped up the stairway to get their money they made a good deal of noise. In his annoyance Mr. Chase remarked:

"There they go, like a drove of mules!"

This was overheard by one of the boys, and a chapel meeting was immediately held and a committee appointed to wait on Mr. Chase and demand an apology, which being immediately forthcoming, the incident was closed.

Those were more strenuous times on both sides than in these good days of mutual understanding. I remember that on the New York Herald some thirty years ago the then assistant foreman, Jack Henderson, getting a little excited one night, sung out:

"Pull out, you fellows! If you don't I'll fire every ——," etc.

Bang! went down the chairman's stick, and Bang! Bang! Bang! went the mallet on the imposing stone that called everybody to chapel meeting, at which Mr. Henderson was required to apologize, which he did at once and very gracefully.

"Colton," said Henderson to his chief proofreader one night, showing him a proof on which a compositor had filed a kick, "what is the use of all this d——d foolishness? Look how this punctuation is all marked up."

"Mr. Henderson," said Colton, "I'm afraid that if you had understood the intricacies of punctuation you would be chasing commas now instead of occupying the high position to which you have achieved. That proof is marked all right."

The Carnegie Public Library is to be dedicated on January 7, a ceremony from which the public, for whom the library was instituted, is to be excluded, as the admission will be by ticket. A lot of howling swells, who would feel insulted at a suggestion that they have any use for a public library, will meet and admire each other for a couple of hours, smear with soft soap the man whose wealth, wrung from ill requited labor, is ostentatiously devoted to monuments to himself, and then the public, whose money, raised by taxing the poor man from 100 to 300 per cent more than the rich man, will support it, may be permitted to come in and borrow books if they are properly humble about it. But what do you and I care? We wouldn't attend the flapdoodle function if we had forty tickets.

A very dear friend of mine—so dear that I won't give his name—had an unpleasant experience with a self hoisting umbrella one morning last week. He had taken more than his quantity of mulledsarsaparilla and his stomach rebelled, so he started for a back door. Having got there, he unfortunately touched the spring of his umbrella, and it opened. It proved as good at catching as at batting.

* * * *

A friend of mine who is always in favor of an appropriation and always agin an assessment heard some one discussing a proposed two-dollar monthly assessment to be made by the union to entertain the convention.

"What!" said he, "two dollars a month from now till August. I'm going down to the union and fight it."

"What is the use to fight it?" said the "josher." "You know those fellows go to the union and do what they please."

"Two dollars a month! Why, that would be $16 for me. Now, if I could get on the committee——"

"Two dollars a month is not much."

"Well, if I don't get on the committee I'm going to fight it!" said my economical friend. "I won't stand for it."

How easily reconciled we are to a "slush fund" if we think there is a rake off in it for us!

* * * *

They had a little disagreement on "Spess" the other day neither the merits nor the final results of which am I acquainted with, but it had to do with fining a proofreader for not "ringing" a word which he had marked in, which word was not in copy, and whether the reader merely failed to "ring" from oversight or refused to do so when his attention was called to the fact, I do not know. In any event it gives me an opportunity to air my opinion—I am "easy" that way. To fine a proofreader for failing to make a "ring" through oversight on his part is as justifiable as to fine a compositor for failing to correct all the errors in a proof—no more so. To give a chairman the right to fine a reader for refusing to "ring" a mark when he himself has the right to do so if he thinks it just is to enable him to revenge himself on the reader for daring to differ with him. If the chairman is permitted to make "rings," as most chairmen are, there should be an end of his power. But the senseless enmity on the part of some compositors toward all proofreaders deserves nothing but contempt and proclaims the incompetency of such as workmen; otherwise they would not have suffered so much at proofreaders' hands as to breed such enmity. However, the proofreader should always have a sufficient sense of fairness to make all "rings" that the compositor has a reasonable ground for claiming, without the intervention of the chairman, with a distinct "leaning toward the side of mercy" at all times.

A young fellow on the Record recently refused to be gold bricked by some St. Louis brokers and his winning was made good, but it is a safe guess that that concern has lost a customer. He telegraphed one afternoon ordering his corn holding to be sold at the opening figure next morning. When the settlement came they reported that they had sold at a lower figure. He demanded his money under penalty of reporting them to the postal authorities, and they settled. I don't know that a gold brick dealer could do much in the G. P. O. unless he offered two bricks for the usual price of one, but I think there will be a dump one of these days on a racing stable investment that will make the Second Division Symposium affair seem like point ought one. But why not? Somebody must get their money, and they say there is one of 'em born every minute.

Is it not pitiful to see great newspapers descend to puerility and childishness? You may read each one of our three great journals through from day to day without discovering an indication that any other newspaper is printed here, except on such occasions as the Star's phenomenal fiftieth anniversary issue, to which the Post gave an editorial send-off of about a third of a column, but to which the Times has yet to refer. One day last week the Post mentioned that "the deceased was employed on a local newspaper," when to give the name of the paper would have taken less space. I don't remember ever seeing the name of the Post in the Star except in copying the editorial above mentioned, and the Times not having given that provocation, no exclusive Star reader knows of its existence. It is too much like country medical ethics.

"Doctor, what other physicians are located in your town?"

"Physicians? Oh, I believe there are a couple of quacks somewhere about town, but I don't know their names."

Down Town.

Charles I. ("Spike") Leonard has accepted a position on the Night Bill Force.

Owing to increase of business of their headquarters the American Federation of Labor are making needed and extensive alterations at 423-425 G street northwest.

The many friends of T. G. Williams, an old and well known printer of this city, who has been confined for several weeks at his residence, 719 Fourth street northwest, will be pleased to learn he has so far recovered as to be about again.

Printers' Dance.

It is to be hoped that the members of Columbia Typographical Union will not allow other pleasures to stand in the way of their attending the big entertainment to be given by their Entertainment Committee on Friday night, January 2, 1903, at National Rifles' Armory. A fine program has been prepared and no pains or expense will be spared to make it a most pleasant affair. Mr. H. M. Wills, the noted impersonator, is given two numbers on the program, which will alone be worth the price of admission. Mr. Wills has been highly praised for his work wherever he has appeared.

Dancing will begin at 10 o'clock.

Friday, January 2, 1903, at National Rifles' Armory, Columbia Typographical Union will dance. Tickets, 25 cents.

The following letter is en eloquent tribute to Capt. W. R. Ramsey and the employes of the Specification room:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
DECEMBER 19, 1902.

CAPT. W. R. RAMSEY,
Foreman Specifications, G. P. O.:

DEAR SIR—I am in receipt of your note of yesterday announcing that the last of the large issue of December 30, closing the specification work for the year 1902, had been placed in the hands of the compositor.

This has been accomplished, as I know, like many of the heavy burdens thrown upon you during the past year, by working your force nights and Sundays.

To the most excellent executive management of your division and the responsive efforts of its employes the the greatest credit is due for the promptness and accuracy with which the heaviest work ever imposed upon it during a calendar year has been disposed of.

In printing 27,136 specifications it has been found necessary to issue only 49 certificates to correct minor errors in the printed copies. Every issue of the specifications has been delivered on time, and on Tuesday of each week the Official Gazette has been delivered at my desk at twelve o'clock, without a failure.

It is well to stop long enough in our busy llives, when closing a chapter, to take note of such efforts and such well-accomplished results, and before enteriug upon a new year's work I wish to assure you and your force that the office recognizes and desires to express its appreciation of your and their efficient and cordial co operation in handling the heaviest year's work in the history of the United States Patent Office.

Wishing you and them a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year, I am

Very truly yours,
J. W. BABSON,
Chief Issue and Gazette Division.

The chair appointed Messrs. W. C. Connor, J. H. Brinkman and Jere F. McCarthy a special committee to carry out the spirit of the following resolution introduced by Delegate Connor:

WHEREAS, The Brookland, Le Droit Park and C street cars, running Northeast, are making good profits; and

WHEREAS, The profits are derived solely from the public riding in their cars; and

WHEREAS, The public is very seriously inconvenienced and must suffer daily in going to and from employment on account of running half-open cars on these lines in cold and wet weather,

Resolved, That a special committee call upon the Commissioners and the Board of Health and request them to recommend to Congress that there should be some legislation compelling all street railroad companies in the District of Columbia to provide more suitable and closed cars for winter service and the removal of the pneumonia breeders which bring about sickness and add discomfort to those who are compelled to sit on the cold, wet seats with the rain beating in on them.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 22, 1902.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER:

Among other matters receiving the attention of the New Orleans Convention of the American Federation of Labor was resolution No. 52, introduced by Delegate A. T. Fish, of the International Association of Car Workers, in regard to the dual and independent car workers' organization, known as the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, local lodges of which, it was stated, are represented in a number of our affiliated Central Bodies and State Branches.

The Convention instructed the undersigned to notify the State Branches and City Central Bodies that wherever there is affiliated with them a local lodge of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen or of the United Brotherhood of Railway Employees, that immediate steps should be taken to have such local lodges withdraw. You are, therefore, hereby instructed to comply with the above action of the convention and I trust you will advise me in regard thereto. Fraternally yours,

SAMUEL GOMPERS,
President.

A communication from Iron Molders' Union, No. 38, of Erie, Pa., referring to the unfair attitude towards organized labor of the Germer Stove Company, formerly Block & Germer, of Erie, Pa., was read and referred to Retail Clerks' Union.

A communication from Mr. Lipscomb, of the National Mosaic Company, anent his employment of non-union men, stating his inability to get competent men otherwise was referred to the Council of Allied Building Trades.

The Registered Drug Clerks communicated the names of the new officers of their organization. Communication received and filed.

The report of the Grievance Committee on the Heurich matter was referred to the Council of Allied Building Trades. Their report on the Heurich matter and Engineers' Union was referred to the latter. They also reported George Brown, barber, had signed a Central Labor Union contract. This matter was referred to Barbers' Union.

The special committee on Theatrical Stage Employes' matter reported progress and that they were preparing a final report for next meeting of this body.

Bartender's League requested a report upon the cases of McGram and Killeen. The committee was granted further time to adjust said matters.

Painters requested that the secretary correspond with J. William Lee, undertaker, and inform him that certain painting now being done for him was by others than members of Painters' Union affiliated with this body.

Business Is Business.

Much adverse criticism is indulged in from time to time regarding the methods of those who labor, even among those in their own ranks, and also from those more fortunately situated. In regard to the first mentioned it must be said, though with some reluctance, that they are prone to criticise those who take an active interest in all that concerns the welfare of the working masses, while they themselves are not in touch with the movement, and are therefore not in a position to judge correctly. Candor compels the conclusion that they are but poor judges of the question they attempt to decide off hand, and a little delicacy on their part to rush into print to defend those who are amply able to take care of themselves would be more becoming and, under the circumstances, certainly more judicious. The business man has his own affairs to attend to, and certainly does not court the solicitude of these over-zealous defenders.

The whole matter is a question of business—of trade—and thousands and thousands of dollars are expended annually in advertising of various kinds to allure the money in the pockets of the people into their coffers, and the business man is certainly astute enough to understand that if he deals otherwise than justly by the people he can not hope for trade.

Now, organized labor, the wealth producers of the land, earn their money by giving more than an eqivalent for what they receive in wages, and after they have the money in their pockets have the indisputed right to spend it with their friends. Some of those who have set themselves in opposition to this large part of the community in the past, know that the aforsaid right has been exercised in the past and that they expect it will continue to be exercised in the future. It is a plain matter of business—the business man wants the workingman's trade and in turn the workingman wants the business man's trade, and if he does not get it he will trade with those who are disposed to give it.

The workingmen and women are striving for better conditions in the matter of hours and wages, and who of all members of the human family are more entitled to benefits based on such a common sense basis?

Again, many of the men of wealth sprang from this class and it does seem to be to the interest of the nation to promote all that would serve to make for the health of all the people, for in this country there is a constant intermingling of the people through the sacred joining in matrimony of our people; it is therefore most essential that all should be healthy and consequently their offspring be healthy, so that in times of stress vigorous defenders could be mustered in to defend the common country.

Take the ranks of our soldiers in every war and it is a fact beyond dispute that the workingman furnished the stuff that won the victories. Our generals have been voted great, and may they ever be respected, but without able bodied soldiers they would have met utter defeat.

In view of the above, those who oppose the betterment of the conditions of the working masses are enemies to our common country and should be treated as such.

To the business man the workingman has only to say "we are ready at all times to trade with those who trade with us."

Mr. Businessman, it is a plain case of "business is business."

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

The wail of H. H. Hamilton in last week's issue of THE TRADES UNIONIST, after quoting a paragraph of mine, is a sermon to all who prefer to trust to the employer's sense of justice and generosity to organizing for their own defense. Many employers are just and generous, but I never heard of such a one who objected to trades unions among his employes. Mr. Hamilton shows the effect of the miseducation that has been willfully sent out among the people where he says that he believes "a labor organization curtails a man's freedom, and the walking delegate and organizer profit alone thereby." As an unskilled laborer he was glad to take a job at a dollar a day, whereas hodcarriers—who are scarcely skilled laborers—command $2 or more by virtue of being organized. A bricklayer, a blacksmith, a machinist, a carpenter, a bookbinder, a printer, a steam engineer, or a member of almost any of the numerous trades that are organized, receives from $3 to $5 a day—trades vary—for a day of never more than ten hours and frequently but eight, while a bookkeeper, an office clerk, and until recently a salesman or a pharmacist, can be had all the hours he is awake for from $30 to $50 a month, because the members of his occupation are not organized into a trade union.

As a general proposition, the non-union man is more to be pitied than blamed—pitied that his want of intelligence could permit him to be led to believe that those who profit by his labor are better friends to him than those of his own kind, who, with him, are dependent for subsistence on the price they can get for their labor. Non-unionism is the acme of selfishness, where one hopes for and tries to get a higher wage than his fellows, and is willing that others may work for below a "living rate" in order that he may receive above it. The non union man, in this day of education, is either one who has not taken advantage of the opportunity for education or a social pervert and a moral degenerate. He is generally ignorant, but occasionally a scoundrel.

We often hear from high places cheap palaver about "a man's right to contract" to give his services for whatever he pleases for as many hours per day as he pleases. Does anyone believe that this claim is made out of any regard for such abstract right? No! It is intended to leave the workingman in such a position that he who wants his labor can force him to accept the smallest wage for the greatest number of hours. If a day's pay is a certain amount, would anyone prefer working ten hours to get it when it may be obtained for eight hours' work?

What organized labor most needs is to urge a campaign of education. Most non union men are such from ignorance, and if the advantages of organization were laid before them logically and dispassionately, nine-tenths of them would gladly become union men. Denunciation and abuse will never accomplish anything in behalf of trades unionism or anything else. "Vinegar never catches flies."

In the meantime, poor Hamilton!

From what I hear, the Day Proof Room sang "Auld Lang Syne" when the whistle blew on the day before Christmas, though why that dismal old whine was selected is more than I can guess, unless it was because everybody could sing it, which is of itself a positive disadvantage. If they must sing, why did they not select something appropriate to the occasion, like "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight," or "Landlord, Fill the Flowing Bowl," or "We Won't Go Home Till Morning," or "Think of Your Head, Think of Your Head, Think of Your Head To-morrow?" As a doleful misery, with nothing but age and decrepitude to recommend it, "Auld Lang Syne" may have suited the voices of that aggregation, but for gladsome Christmas music it is as inappropriate as "Rise Up, William Riley" at a wake, or "Farewell, My Own," at a wedding. A special version was gotten up and printed for the occasion, some say by Bill Reed, which was a club-footed, wapper-jawed, wall-eyed, knock-kneed, slab-sided, hump-backed, bandy-legged, snaggled-toothed, crooked mouthed affair, with 8-foot, 6 foot, and 4-foot lines indiscriminately. There are times when I am glad I work o' nights.

Help Wanted.—The services of all able-minded readers of THE TRADES UNIONIST are wanted to help make it the greatest labor paper in the world. Just think how few times you are invited or even permitted to assist in making the paper you read. Printers are natural-born editors and writers, and bookbinders, pressmen, electrotypers, and stereotypers readily acquire the knack. There is no reason why we should not all contribute to it from our stores of experience and wisdom. We don't need the chapel rot, unless it is really news—such as any newspaper would publish, but we would all like to read essays on the various labor topics, disquisitions on what ought to be done, and sketches and anecdotes of men, things, and times. I could name forty or fifty who could write entertaining as well as instructive matter. I would like to read a few articles from the able pen of E. E Calhoon, of the Job Room. Frank Kidd could tell some wonderful experiences if he would. J. L. Holland's productions would interest all of us. John Onyun, Bill Dorsey, Walter Sharp, F. N. Whitehead, Henry Noyes, "Windy" Morgan, "Petie" Ellis, and a hundred others could tell stories of the "road" and "roadsters." Bill Sweeney, Charlie Garrett, N. Watkins, Lewis Petrie, and others could tell us about old times in Washington. Zach Jenkins and Jimmie Ross could tell us all about Philadelphia men and institutions. "Funny" Roberts, George Wilson, Clements, and others could tell us about "doane Sothe." John Kiernan and I could hold up the temperance agitation. In fact, there is something for everybody to do, and the sooner you get at it the better.

The news came last Saturday of the death of William M. Crawford at Mifflintown, Pa., about Christmas Day, of consumption. Crawford will be remembered as a compositor and proof reader here for a number of years, until about 1895, since which time he has been at Mifflintown or near there, running a paper part of the time and at other times working for others. For some time before he left here he suffered with stomach troubles. He was probably near 50 years old at his death. Many friends will regret to hear of the decease of poor Bill Crawford.

The success Robert B. Smythe has made of the Harrisonburg (Va) News is enough to encourage any young fellow who feels that he has any gum in him to take a crack at the world. Being disconnected from his situation in the G. P. O. a few years ago, inside of a week he was established in his present location, and less than a year's toil put him where success was no longer a problem. His paper is an evening daily, and he is equipped with all the machinery, material, and applicances to conduct the first-class business which he has built up. He was a candidate for president of this union in 1896 against Thomas A. Bynum and John Dexter Kehoe, when the latter was elected, and it was a fortunate thing for Bob that he was defeated, for if he had been elected he might be plugging along yet in some dark corner of the Fourth Division. Four or five years ago the citizens of Charlotte, Va., seeing how he had brightened up Harrisonburg, offered him $1,000 to remove his plant there, but his home city gave him such assurances of success that he declined the offer. A year or so ago he associated Ben J. Shannon, formerly assistant foreman of the Second Division, with himself, and the two are in control of the most influential paper and the best-paying business in the Valley of Virginia.

Dr. A. H. Taylor who served his printer apprenticeship in the G. P. O. and was for many years employed there as compositor and clerk, is having great success in his medical practice, I am told and am glad to be able to record. It is a source of pride that our members succeed in the professions as in every other calling they undertake.

As the New Year has come and we have not as yet had the names of any aspirants for delegate placed before us, except by faint rumor, I think I will make a few nominations myself. With the convention in our city, we ought to have an especially strong delegation, and the names I give are those who are, as a rule, entitled to classification as strong men. Without fear or favor I offer these names, excluding all who have ever been delegates within my knowledge: G. P. O.—A. J. Arnold, M. H. Barnum, George R. Boone, James E. Bright, W. H. Brigham, F. E. Buckland, J. W. Doocy, A. P. E. Doyle, C. H. Ennis, Edward Y. Fisher, T. J. Fitzwilliam, E. F. Geyer, W. L. Gutelius, W. T. Hastings, T. W. Haworth, J. L. Holland, A. L. Huss, John B. Jaques, Thomas L Jones, J. E. Keefe, Clarence Lewis, John D. Ligon, R. L. Mabrey, H. B. Major, F. H. Melick, A. K. Mundheim, J. W. McCann, Andrew McGarraghy, Ambrose O'Keefe, Harry O'Donnell, John O'Donnoghue, Grant E. Price, J. R. Purvis, H. J. Redfield, T. J. Rowe, Milo Shanks, George L. Sherman, J. G Stelle, John R. Sturgis, L. A. Wisener, G. J. Woodgate, C. B. Yater. Downtown—August Bruehl, F. B. Crown, Z. W. Denham, A. S. Fennell, E. A. Fleishell, George E. Hupert, T. C. Parsons, J L. Rodier, D. L. Sandoe. In order to avoid apparent invidious distinction I have made the lists alphabetical. There are hundreds of other good men, but these are my nominations, and if I cause a bee to buzz where none ever buzzed before, I shall be happy. Now, gentlemen, announce yourselves! All aboard for the convention of 1903! Sixty dollars cash, and you don't have to go out of town to spend it!

The Washington Linotype School, Costello's Building, corner of Sixth and G streets, is still busy turning out operators, many of its graduates being employed throughout the country. There are few opportunities nowadays for a compositor to acquire knowledge of the machine and this is one of the best.

My friend William H. Kelly comes nobly to my rescue, for which I thank him. I am sufficiently perverse to revel in criticism of my stuff, but not quite anxious enough for detraction to be a party to it. Most of the faultfinders are like Captain Corcoran—"they mean well, but they don't know." They think what they write is literature and they can't enjoy anything else. As a rule, they don't mean what they say about me or anything else.

The papers on Christmas contained notice of the death of Albert E. Sardo, formerly foreman of the Press Room of the Government Printing Office, at Rumford Falls, Me., on December 23. I don't know the circumstances, but I heard he was killed by an electric car. He lived here for many years and was a nephew, I believe, of the late Nathaniel Sardo. Many friends will learn with regret of his untimely death.

William Gibson, of the firm of Gibson Brothers, book and job printers, died December 23, at the age of 79 years, after some months of illness from a paralytic stroke. The firm of Gibson Brothers has been in existence over forty years, there being but one of the original brothers alive, George Gibson, the other member, John, having died several years ago. The family came from Ireland originally.

The electrotypers and stereotypers have assessed themselves 1 per cent of their earnings to entertain their convention, which is to be held here at the same time as the I. T. U. convention. I am sorry to say that I know of no labor organization the members of which cry as hard over union dues and assessments as our own.

Frank Stretton announced the other evening that he is a candidate for delegate this year and that he doesn't propose to get out of the way of anybody hereafter. If he adheres to this determination, his candidacy leaves but two places to be competed for by the G. P. O. aspirants—as far as I can see from where I am now at.

A copy of the Baker City (Oreg.) Herald, Christmas number, was received in the Night Proof Room the other day. It consists of 16 pages, filled with illustrations, the outer pages printed in colors, and shows the enterprise of the publisher, Charles W. Hill, formerly of the Proof Room. The Herald is an evening paper and its advertising patronage is an evidence of its prosperity. Our G. P. O. boys don't often branch out, but when they do, they do it right.

Greatest in the World.

It is seldom that any one man can claim the distinction of having it universally conceded that in the whole world there is not, nor ever has been, his equal. But such is the reputation of Alfred A. Farland, the wonderful banjoist.

This statement, however, conveys no idea of his ability to many persons who are apt to think that, while his playing may be better, it is much like that of other banjo players who are generally considered good.

It should be added that Farland is not merely a great banjo player in the ordinary sense, but a true artist, who has developed a touch which produces pure musical tones from the instrument that he has elevated and dignified, and one who has proven his right to rank with the greatest artists in other lines.

In this connection a Philadelphia paper recently had the following: "Of Mr. Farland's Philadelphia Recital too much praise can not be said. His playing not only charmed the vast audience, but enthralled also. No person, however conservative or prejudiced upon subjects musical, could, after listening to not only wonderful feats of finger gymnastics, but also to the sweetest and most sympathetic tones imaginable, doubt the banjo's right to a place in the fore rank of musical instruments, or deny Mr. Farland a prominent place among the world's greatest virtuosi. Mr, Farland is assured of an an ever welcome from this city's most critical minds."

Mr. Farland plays at National Rifles' Hall on Friday evening, January 16, 1903. Tickets may be obtained from Chas. Stutsman, Night Proof Room; S. J. Gompers, Specification Division; Ed. L. Howes, Job Room; J. M. McLaughlin, Third Division, and Geo. Furbeshaw, Fourth Division.

Bindery Notes.

Have John Noonan relate to you his escape from a colored man who went crazy on Christmas.

Billy Casey has engaged a veterinary surgeon to fix up his dog. He claims the dog is a ventriloquist and is of great value.

The foreman asked Julius Greibel if he would like a calendar, and Julius replied: "Och never mind, I will use last year's; its not used up already yet."

One of the young ladies of the paging room received a beautiful diamond ring for Christmas. It is expected that in the near future she will be led to the altar by a well-known young man in the G. P. O.

Miss Nanie T. Daniel was the unanimous choice of the Women's Bindery Union for president. She is active in the affairs of the organization, and has served twice as delegate to the International conventions.

Messrs. Schlipf, Cleasby, and Loger, of Philadelphia, gave an exhibition in the art of bookbinding in the window of one of the large stores of that city, during the holidays. It made a big hit and drew large crowds.

Al. Peterson, who is greatly interested in the building of a home for sick and aged bookbinders, has issued the first call for volunteer subscriptions. We hope Local No. 4 will be among the first to respond, for it is a step in the right direction. If we want to do something good at the beginning of the year, let us subscribe.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 1, 1903.

The Old and the New.

The year just ended and now numbered with the past has not, in some respects, been a conspicuous exception to the years preceding. There has been in the individual experience the same or similar chapters of joys and sorrows and seasons of great expectations, with accompanying disappointments. Human nature remains about the same, while with increasing zeal he man of business sagacity is conuring new schemes to "do" others est others "do" him. Society is the same stratified thing it was last year and for years before, with lines of demarcation running all the way from nothing to "400" and from full dress to no dress at all. Boys of tender years are yet reckoning the possible time when they too may burn five cents as an evidence of thrift and do as men do in all things without limit; and their sisters, with accustomed grace and loveliness, are receiving without a murmur and with becoming modesty those attentions which relieve them of all responsibility and which places burdens upon the backs of mothers, who are accustomed to such things, and who are ready to make all manner of sacrifices that their darlings may shine and rival as lazy society drones.

In the domain of statesmanship there is the same studied diplomacy which proceeds continuously and at times ambiguously. The ship of state each year encounters the same gales, and it requires yet the same firm hand at the helm, the same unerring chart and compass to avoid the shoals and rocks, the same keen eye for danger-signals, the same courage, the same moderation and the same degree of wisdom to avoid temptation that it did last year and all the years before.

In the world of industry the masters of wealth are demonstrating the power of concentration and control of all the great agencies of commerce and trade. The process has passed the experimental stages and with such marvelous rapidity that it seems but the day before yesterday since the transformation set in. Prior to all this each little community with its diversified interests builded and prospered according to the amount of effort expended. With the advent of machinery as a means of cheapening the cost of production came the opportunity for capital to gather to itself a larger share in the economy of labor, and by the control of raw material, means of transportation and the markets to make dependent all those who had heretofore composed the great army of competitive employers and who by the terms of the new dispensation were displaced or reduced to the condition of clerks or salesmen, with prices stipulated or fixed by those in control. To such extent has the arrogance born of this new dispensation been carried during the year just closed that its abuses more than its benefits have been discussed, and only with the promise of correction by the enforcement of existing laws or by new enactments has an indignant public withheld its seal of righteous condemnation.

The year 1902 has been an exception in one essential feature from those which have preceded. The object lesson (yet in force) which came with the refusal of the operators to accede to the just demands of the coal miners has demonstrated that the safer and better way, and one of permanent and lasting benefit, is through Government ownership of all public utilities, including those things which nature in her marvelous bounty has supplied for the common good of all mankind. Let us hope that the year just beginning will bring with it the blessings of industrial peace and a just measure of fairness—without the necessity of having to fight for it.

THE TRADES UNIONIST wishes everybody a happy New Year, and to each of its patrons and friends a ton of coal, and more if they can get it.

THE next in the order of holidays observed will be Washington's birth day, which falls on Sunday, necessitating the use of Monday. Agreed to without objection.

AT this writing the American Association for the Advancement of Science is holding sessions in this city. These gentlemen are generally far from home, geographically speaking, but quite "at home" on each of the topics treated, save where they have digressed and tackled the labor problem. On this subject the real scientist could produce a book of many blank pages.

MRS. JESSIE FREMONT, wife of Gen. JOHN C. FREMONT, died at her late residence in Los Angeles, California, last Saturday night. Gen. FREMONT, it will be remembered, was the first candidate of the Republican party for President, in 1856. He engaged in the discoveries of the Rocky Mountain region and was successful in over throwing Mexican authority in Upper California in 1846.

BY a sort of circuitous route comes the news that oil has been "struck" at Riverdale, and that the denizens of that quiet little suburb are disturbed with visions which make it possible that their little holdings may double or treble in value as a consequence. We hope the report may prove true, and that along with oil they may also discover a coal mine. There is quite a sprinkling of "prints" in and about Riverdale.

IT WOULD be a relief if for once and all it could be settled whether that aged instrument known as the "Monroe Doctrine" is to be considered obsolete or whether, if it is a real living thing, it has friends enough to insist that it shall not be buried alive. This thing so much talked about at present was born in 1823 and is pitched to the key of "Yankee Doodle." There are people of to-day who, when they read it, experience "that ringing in the ears" which is pretty good evidence that it possesses the true metal.

JOHN MITCHELL, the mine workers' president, has had a white carnation named after him. At first thought it seems a mite incongruous to have a white, fragile flower named after the leader of coal workery, but when you come to think of his unsullied integrity, incorruptible honor, and steadfastness of purpose to the cause nearest his heart, a white flower is none too white. We have no doubt that JOHN MITCHELL could have ended the strike with thousands to himself and disaster to the union, if he had so willed it, many a time during its progress. An anchor would be more typical of him. Something to tie to.—Advocate, Wellsboro, Penna.

THE great liberality and good cheer of Washington people during the Christmas season of 1902, according to a post-office official, exceeded all previous records, which was demonstrated by entries and receipts at the city post office. For the year 1901 the total number of packages sent during the five days preceding Christmas was 119,813, as against 199,700 for 1902, besides 54,000 pieces of third class matter. The total daily average of parcels sent was 40,000. For the three days preceding Christmas there were 459,403 letters cancelled, and for the five days preceding there was a daily average of $5,000 worth of stamps sold, including stamped envelopes.

THE Senate Committee on Education and Labor has agreed to report a bill to limit the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States. The manufacturers of the country are "up in arms" and ready with all manner of subterfuges and proposals for dallying in the hope of entirely defeating the measure or so crippling it by amendments as to leave little life in the bill. The measure, as reported from the House, and which met with but slight opposition at that end of the Capitol, had the endorsement of those representing organized labor, and to the committee intrusted with that work, but the Senate Committee has so emasculated it that it bears little resemblance to the original bill. A lively time is anticipated when it is brought before the full Senate for consideration, when it is expected that new evidence will be gathered to make it more conclusive that the country at large would be benefitted if members of the upper house were also elected by direct vote of the people.

Child Labor.

LADY FLORENCE DIXIE has written from Scotland to President ROOSEVELT concerning child labor in the United States. This noted charity worker says in part:

"Land of the free indeed! Land of greed and grab I would rather call a country which in the twentieth century permits such a system of barbaric slavery to exist. In this country, in old lag-behind England, such things existed 100 years ago, but even we have banished that crime, while America still nurses it in its bosom. Will you not end it? Will you put forth your great power and influence to strike down this hideous and disgusting and selfish practice? What else is it but a most horrible form of slavery?"

Reward of Merit.

The re election of SAMUEL GOMPERS as President of the American Federation of Labor was fully deserved, for he is undoubtedly the most capable, the most conservative, the most effective labor leader the movement in this country has ever produced. He has the entire confidence of organized labor throughout the United States. May the Grand Old Man live long to head the Federation.—Jamestown (N. Y.) Labor Advocate.

Specification Scintillations.

In the matter of Patent Office appropriation, the amount for producing copies of drawings, weekly issues of patents, etc, was recently increased from $64,000 to $100,000.

Rumors are rife of a wedding about the time the blue bird whistles in the North of one of our very popular and accomplished compositors in alley 2 and——well, just wait and see.

George W. Graham, who is confined at home on account of the amputation of his right foot, was remembered by his colleagues recently. The present consisted of a box of fine cigars.

Capt. E. D. Smoot says that since he took up a residence at Vienna, Va., his neighbors have lost over forty chickens. We have observed the genial Smoot devouring chicken at lunch-hour with startling regularity.

Scott K. Young recently waded into poetry with the following result:

What can a missionary do for a Hindoo
When the biting frost of night makes his skin blue;
For on clothes he is shy,
And with a sob and a sigh,
For a suit he'll have to make his skin do.

It is rumored that on the night of December 22, a certain prominent member of this chapel with a pronounced German accent, and wearing a dark overcoat, black slouch hat, and eyeglasses, was seen meandering along G street muttering, "Der ayes shav et (hic) sho sordered."

Evidence that the employing printers of Washington have got together was recently shown in the bids of five of the leading firms on a job of printing worth about $100, the difference between the highest and lowest being just $1.75. This shows that they were all figuring from the same basis.

Mrs. Amanda Gormley was appropriately remembered by the members of the Tea Club, on Christmas, with a handsome present as a mark of the esteem in which she is held. Though nearly three score and ten, Mrs. Gormley is as active as a woman of forty, and her sunny good nature makes her a favorite with all.

Would it not be the handsome thing for Columbia Union to elect one of the lady members as delegate to the coming convention? We have, I presume, about the largest number of lady members of any union under the I. T. U., and many of them have been active in promoting the interests of unionism. They should be encouraged to take yet more active interest in union affairs by sending one of them as delegate.

N. M. Light was very much put out the other day by the absent mindedness of one of the patrons of the swell cafe he patronizes. Some one exchanged overcoats with him. Mr. Light is not seriously troubled about the loss of his swell "Newmarket," but is shocked at the realization of having dined with one of the canaille, judging from the contents of the pockets of the coat left behind—two cigar butts, and "old soldiers" at that.

In a recent article to THE TRADES UNIONIST, Mr. A. F. Bloomer wrote of the Specification Room in a jocular vein, concluding with the remark that if he "was sent up to the 'Spess,' he would either resign or go to the Philippines." From a personal knowleege of the gentleman's trustibility, I believe him sincere, since he would be tempted to resign rather than accept cases at the "Spess" or any other division in the G. P. O.

At a recent chapel meeting the "ayes" and "nays" responded so vigorously upon a certain question that the chairman (in doubt) decided in the affirmative This incident reminded me of a session of the Florida Legislature in 1886. The Lower House was composed of about sixty Democrats and twelve Republicans, but among the Republican trojans were several loud-mouthed patriots of both races, the most illustrious being a colored member, Anderson, of Duval county, who was possessed of the voice of Stentor, of mythological fame. When partisan questions were introduced, the Republicans appeared to have the advantage by reason of their wonderful lung-power, and as a result some Democrat would solemnly arise and call for a "division." Of course the Democratic majority would rise up in its might, while the Republican minority actually had the nerve to stand up and be counted. There are a few leather-lunged members of this chapel who can make enough noise to disconcert any chairman.

Geyer—Winship.

We clipped the following from the Rushville (Ind.) Republican, of December 23:

The marriage of Mr. Edwin F. Geyer, of Washington, D C., to Miss Pearl Winship, daughter of Jesse T. Winship, was solemnized at noon last Saturday, at the bride's home south of town. The ceremony was performed by Rev. S.A. Mowers, in the presence of a large company of friends and relatives of the bride and groom. The house was tastefully decorated for the happy occasion.

Mr. Geyer is employed in the Government Printing Office at Washington, and is highly spoken of by all who know him. His bride is one of Rush County's popular young ladies, and belongs to one of the prominent families in the county. They begin life with the best wishes of a host of friends. Mr. Geyer and bride left on Saturday evening for Cincinnati. They will reside at Washington, D. C.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

Columbia Union's death roll for the past year numbered 34.

Shelby Smith is reading proof on the Philadelphia North American.

Frank Rogers, of the Record Clerks' Division of the G. P. O., is confined at his home on account of illness.

Frank Eckert, formerly foreman of the Indianapolis Press, is to be the new foreman of the Baltimore American.

A Happy New Year to all our readers and patrons, and may they have abundance of union-mined coal, good wages, good health, prosperous and happy homes, and lots of union-made clothing to don during winter's stay.

William B. Prescott, ex-President of the International Typographical Union, now a proof reader on the Baltimore News, will deliver a lecture on "Trade Unionism" at the Johns Hopkins University, Tuesday evening, January 6.

R. T. Anderson, who resigned from the Library Branch Bindery, G. P. O., last March, and left for the far West on account of poor health, returned Christmas day and is in every way a well man. "Tony" states he went overland by wagon from Kansas to the Coast, being several weeks en route. He also visited points in Washington State and California. While at San Francisco he saw W. C. Watson and B G. Ferguson, and at Tacoma Sam Beadle, all well-known printers formerly of this city.

Call at 211 H street northwest and look at the nice, comfortable rooms; charges moderate.

E. C. Saltzman is time-keeper and average man during Lenhart's absence. Parshall is acting bankman for the present.

The many friends of Old "Hutch," slug 39, will be sorry to learn of his severe illness. Here's hoping he will soon recover.

It's a good thing for us all, perhaps, that "Xmas comes but once a year," otherwise we would all "go into the hands of a receiver."

The friends of Joe Lenhart will be sorry to hear that he is quite sick and is now in Sibley Hospital. Let us hope that he is not seriously ill and that he will be out again soon.

There have been quite a number of sudden deaths in our organization during the past month.

Moral: "Be ye always ready, for Death cometh as a thief in the night."

We think that by the time Pard Bloomer and his friends get through with the Fourth Division literary syndicate for their unjust criticism of his ("Pard's") literary style they will be sorry they "said it."

We are glad to learn that most all of our members have been put to work during the past week or two. Let the good work go on for we all need the almighty dollar more at this stage or time of the year than at any other season.

Dillman, of this division, has developed into a first-class amateur photographer. Some of his pictures were on exhibition in Chicago, not long since, and received a very flattering notice. Dillman is a member of the Capitol Camera Club.

Friend Branham is quite an enterprising funny man, for, not satisfied with managing a bird "nursery" and immortalizing his friend Wood in prose, he has also gone into the "dog-raising" business, and has several canines to sell or give to his many friends.

The Chairman of the Committee on Rumors was kept busy Tuesday, prior to the election for chairman, but after the votes were counted quiet reigned supreme. Goodky was the lucky man, as the following vote will show: Goodkey, 32; Johnson, 30; Razey, 3; Blank, 1; total, 66. H. F. J. Drake, Wm. N. Goldstein and Fred. I. Nobles acted as tellers.

Thanks to the President and the present Public Printer, who has always given his employes the benefit of every doubt, the employes of this office were put on an equal footing with the other departments of the Government, so far as the day and a half holiday is concerned. This is only fair and just, as we are all working for the same "firm," so to speak, and should be treated in the same manner.

The following score is the result of a championship game on the bowling alleys played by members of this chapel:

First game—Parshall, 113; Wolfe, *43; Sherman, 101; Hallock, 99; total, 355. Branham, 89; Nobles, 106; Saltzman, 88; Soult, 92; total, 375 Second game—Parshall, 108; Wolfe, †67; Sherman, 98; Hallock, 90; total, 373. Branham, 111; Nobles, 96; Saltzman, 97; Soult, 91; total, 395 Third game—Parshall, 97; Wolfe, ‡69; Sherman, 67; Hallock, 106; total, 339 Branham, 104; Nobles, 108; Saltzman, 94; Soult, 76; total, 382.

*Ten poodles. †Four poodles. ‡Two poodles.

Wolfe bowled in rare form, outpoodling his opponent 10 to 1. Parshall got the highest individual score. The game was enjoyed by everyone in sight.

It is said that wise men often change their minds, and as President Roosevelt is considered to be in that class, we think it would not be a bad idea to have a committee of our union wait on him and state the facts in the case and see if they could not get him to reconsider his recommendation in regard to cutting down the reports, etc, because if his recommendation is carried out verbatim we understand it will result in throwing a large number of our members out of employment. If it is absolutely necessary to cut down the expenses of the Government let it be done in some other direction—River and Harbor Bill, for instance. We believe the President, who has always treated our organization with courtesy, will give the request due consideration and, if we can judge the present by the past, grant us any reasonable concessions we might ask.

Perhaps the coal strike, while it has caused considerable worry and anxiety and given certain dishonest coal dealers an "opportunity"—for "opportunity makes the thief"—to rob the helpless consumers, may prove a blessing in disguise, as an opportunity has been given to the public, which might otherwise have been lost, to learn how cruel, barbarous, and inhuman the miners have been treated and systematically robbed by their employers, some of whom profess to be disciples of the Meek and Lowly Nazarine, who commanded his followers, "that whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," or words to that effect. Surely when we read of such horrible, heartrending scenes as the testimony of the miners indicate, we are led to exclaim, with the poet Burns, "that man's inhumanity to man makes countless millions mourn." An opportunity has been given the public to hear both sides of this coal strike controversy.

It is said that it is never "too late to do good," and we note with pleasure that the Connellsville Coke and Iron Company, of which Mr. Frick, of Homestead riot fame, is an active member, has raised the salary of all its employes 8 per cent, which means a difference of about $8,000,000 per year. Had the owners of the coal mines in Pennsylvania raised, instead of attempting to lower, the salary of their employes, some months ago, there would be less suffering for fuel in this and other cities of this great and glorious Republic. It does seem almost paradoxical that under a government supposed to be of the people, by the people and for the people, the arbitrary action of a few men, in refusing to arbitrate, should be able to paralyze the coal industry of the country and deprive the Government itself of the necessary fuel to keep the departments going. It does seem to the casual observer as though the Young Republic of the West was, or is, "drifting away from the sweet, simple governmental faith of its youth."

Leave of Absence Claims.

The argument of the leave of absence claims comes up before the Supreme Court, Monday, January 5. The printed briefs on both sides have been filed.

The principal argument for the Government is that, if a temporary employe of the Government Printing Office was entitled to a leave of absence or its commuted value, his only way of obtaining it was to apply to the Public Printer for it while he was in the service and, if it was refused, to apply to the courts for a writ of mandamus on the Public Printer to require him to allow the leave of absence or pay for unused leave.

The argument of Messrs. George A. and William B. King, who, with Mr. Clark McKercher as their associate, represent the temporary employes of the Government Printing Office who are interested in the claim, calls attention to the Acts of Congress of 1894, 1895, and 1896, which, in express terms, provide "That it shall be lawful to allow pay for pro rata leave to those serving fractional parts of a year; also to allow pay for pro rata leave of absence to employes of the Government Printing Office in any fiscal year, notwithstanding the fact that thirty days' leave of absence, with pay, may have been granted to such employes in that fiscal year on account of service rendered in a previous fiscal year."

They also call attention to the fact, in 1897, Congress appropriated nearly $60,000 for the payment of "such sums as may be due said employes and former employes for accrued and unpaid leaves of absence for the fiscal years 1887 to 1894, both inclusive;" also to the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury to the effect that "The intentions of the various enactments since June 19, 1894, evidently is to authorize payment to any employe who severs his connection with the Government Printing Office of all the leave accrued but has not been taken by him, not exceeding thirty days, for the prior fiscal year, and the pro rata proportion of thirty days for the year in which he severs his connection."

They say, in answer to the point of the Attorney-General that application should have been made for a mandamus:

"It would have to be a severe case of oppression under color of office, which would even justify a mere subordinate in the Government Printing Office, and a temporary at that, in making a peremptory demand upon the Public Printer, the head of that great office, and then, upon refusal, in treating him as in personal default. Much less will the subordinate be treated as himself in default because he did not invoke the compulsory process of the courts against his official superior.

"Of course, if the claimant in this case was entitled to make a peremptory demand for his leave of absence, and on the refusal of the Public Printer to apply to the courts for a mandamus to compel its allowance, so were all the other temporary employes. The idea of two hundred employes of the Government Printing Office, all of them only temporarily in service, peremptorily demanding of the Public Printer their right to an immediate leave of absence, and then applying to the courts for relief by way of mandamus, suggests a subversion of all established discipline which stamps the proposition as impossible of realization in a well-ordered administrative system. A theory so impracticable of application to the actual conditions of the Government service should be equally untenable when set up as a defense to an otherwise valid claim.

"There was not, in this case, any oppressive conduct on the part of the Public Printer. Indeed, it is but fair to add that he was not guilty of any violation of law whatever. He exercised a lawful discretion in the adoption of the rule or practice, not to allow leave of absence to persons temporarily employed, and the only consequence of his action in so doing was to entitle the temporary employe, to whom such leave was not, by the rules, accorded in kind, to the statutory alternative of pro rata pay for such leave.

"The claimant, therefore, not having received the 'leave of absence, with pay,' became entitled to the statutory alternative of 'pay for pro rata leave of absence' This being a money demand against the United States, the only appropriate forum for its enforcement was the Court of Claims."

They say in conclusion:

"Exceptional language must have an exceptional construction. It cannot be assumed that Congress, when legislating for the Government Printing Office in language differing in so marked a degree from that employed in provisions for leaves of absence in every other department of the Government, intended nothing more than was provided for such other departments. That intention is demonstrated by the terms of the law itself. It is to allow a leave of absence, with pay, for thirty days in each year to all the employes of the Government Printing Office, with pay for pro rata leave of absence accrued, but not taken, in the exact proportion of the term for which each employe has served, whether for the whole or a fractional part of a year."

Much interest is being taken by those who have claims that will be affected by the decision. These include all who were in temporary employment in the Government Printing Office at any time between July 1st, 1895, and the present time. Unfortunately some of them, who served over six years ago, are now barred by the statutory limitation of six years, while others soon will be unless their claims are very promptly presented. Many new claims are being filed in the Court of Claims by Messrs. George A. and William B. King.

A limited number of copies of their argument have been sent to this office for free distribution among claimants interested in the decision and will be given gratuitously to all interested.

MOMUS CLUB.

The Coming Banquet at the Regent a Record Breaker.

The Momus Club (The Knockers for short), will open the 1903 season with a banquet on the 18th instant, that bids fair to be a record breaker. At the last meeting of the General Committee it was practically decided to hold "siestas" only every second month, but the interest manifested appears to be so general that the club may reconsider this plan.

The date for the "blooming" is fixed for the 18th, at Hotel Regent, at 8:30 p. m.

Several popular Members of Congress are expected to be present and the committee now has under arrangement a program of entertainment of Congress are expected to be present, and the committee now has under arrangement a program of entertainment of the excellence usual with this organization.

As the number is growing rapidly the subscription papers will positively close on the 13th instant.

The chairman of the General Committee will be at Hotel Regent on Sunday, the 11th, between 3 and 6 p. m. to issue tickets to subscribers, or they can be secured from division representative after that date.

It is the purpose of the club that all who desire to attend may have the opportunity to do so, and to that end a committee, with a representative in nearly every division of the Government Printing Office, has the matter in charge of reserving covers for the forthcoming event. It has been impossible to reach all, and those in the branches or newspaper offices who are desirous of being present can see any member of committee or call at the Regent on the afternoon of the 11th instant.

Following is the committee in charge of lists: W. S. McKean, Jr., chairman General Committee; W. R. Love, First Division; Frank Hall, Second Division; Wm. H. McEnaney, Third Division; Dud. Fleming, Fourth Division; T. J. Rowe, Fifth Division; E. Burkholder, Sixth Division; T. A. Bynum, Day Proof; F. N. Whitehead, Job Room; Wm. Guetetius, Specification; Chas. Resignation accepted.

The committee having in hand the investigation of the matter between the Building Trades Section and the firm of Rudolph, West & Co., who in erecting a building have employed Contractor Prescott, who is notoriously unfair to union labor, upon instructions, had the matter referred to the Grievance Committee.

The Coopers' International Union communicated requesting this body to use its influence in protesting to Congress, through Senators and Members, again the passage of bill H. R. 13674, which is designed to stop the issuance of revenue stamps by the Government for one-eighth kegs of beer.

The election of officers for the next six months resulted in President Hamerstrom being re-elected by a rising vote. H. W. Sherman, of the Electrical Workers, was elected vice-president by acclamation. Secretary Winslow, of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, was re-elected by acclamation. J. A. Daly, of Sheet Metal Workers, defeated W. S. Crown, of Musicians, for the honor of financial secretary. H. M. Heisley, of Carpenters, was re elected treasurer by acclamation. The Grievance Committee reported their inability to adjust the differences between the Bartenders' League and Mr. McGrann, saloonist.

Special Committee on Stage Employes matters reported the Empire, Columbia, Lafayette, and Kernan's theatres had signed their contracts; that Chase's and the Academy would sign during the week; that the National signed a modified contract which was not acceptable to the Stage Employes. This was reported back to the committee for a report next week.

The Legislative Committee reported as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 5, 1903.

There has been favorably reported to the Senate by the Committee on Education and Labor a bill, H. R. 3076, entitled: "An Act limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia, thereby securing better products and for other purposes."

The Central Labor Union of the District of Columbia, being a component part of the two millions of organized wage-workers of the country fully indorse this measure and respectfully ask that you give the bill referred to your favorable consideration.

We believe the bill to be the most beneficent and important measure as affecting the social, moral, physical, intellectual, and well-being of the wage-earners of the country than any measure ever proposed in the Congress of the United States.

In response to an intelligent and patriotic public sentiment States, municipal governments, and 80 per cent of the manufacturing and construction firms of our country have provided for the shorter, or eight-hour, workday and we sincerely trust that the United States Senate, in line with this sentiment, will enact the measure, H. R 3076, pending in that body.

AFTER-DINNER DILATIONS.

THE OLD, OLD STORY.

When the bells tolled out old nineteen two and rang in nineteen three,
I found I'd been a sinner bad, from A clear down to Z.
Then I began to swear, or rather to resolve,
Upon a rule of conduct to leave bad habits off.
As I proceeded to enumerate the many little things
Which are pleasing to the senses, yet leave their little stings,
The list looked like a pyramid of "safe" and
"doubtful" States,
As politicians call it in making out their
"slates."
The more that I pondered the more I grew confused,
And a feeling took possession something like the blues.
Then I did swear, for full three hours or more,
I swore I'd lead a better life—but not till nineteen four.

USEFUL HINTS ON ECONOMY.

Instead of high-priced soaps, use tar.

Sign no man's notes, not even your own.

When living is high, try and do without it.

Don't buy short pants expecting they will wear long.

If expenses run high, turn off the hired girl and the gas.

Put off the needed hair cut or shave and so get two for one.

Avoid the slot-machine, which is like putting money in a hole.

If your credit is good, get trusted and put the money in your pocket.

To keep dry, visit the saloons often, but don't spend money for umbrellas.

If your wife asks for a dime give her a nickel, and a cent if a nickel is required.

Never ride on a street car or run for the doctor. These things belong to a fast life.

Let your wife do the shopping. She has an eye for remnants and 48 and 99 cent bargains.

Buy coal when it is plentiful and cheap that you may not care when others are in want.

If in an unguarded moment you are tempted to treat somebody, ask yourself up, and let that end it.

If you must go to church let your gift not exceed one cent for every time the contribution box is passed, and tip toe yourself out if the appeals are too prolonged.

If the boy pleads for a pair of skates tell him that skating is a dangerous pastime, and give him a snow shovel and let him "work it out."

Be kind to the poor and give them all the old clothes you have decided are unfit for further use, and save for them such scraps of food as may be spared without loss.

If you must make Christmas presents don't rush. There will be time enough after you have been remembered and when the extent of your purchase can be better determined.

Don't spend money for newspapers. You can get all needed information by borrowing or from proof sheets at the office of publication; or, if you are a printer, you may get advance news by scanning the "forms" before they are put to press.

If you have the toothache consider that by visiting the dentist you lose not only the tooth but also the price for extraction. A moment's reflection of this kind has been known not only to save a half-dollar but also to put an end to the toothache.

If you have occasion to employ labor seek the man with an empty stomach and who is poorly clad and possibly has a family to support, and one not affiliated with organized labor. He needs your assistance and would very likely give you service at profitable figures.

When you have saved till the pile has come to be a burden, go boldly to the bank, make your deposit, and come quickly away with an air of confidence which will satisfy spectators that you have made up your mind to risk the thing, instead of loitering around the lobby to see if others are willing to take the same chances.

Now that the glad season is over, gather all the Christmas toys, put them in a stout box, fasten the cover down tightly with big nails, stowe the thing away in the garret, and tell the children that if they will be good and don't ask for anything toothsome or new for a year that Santa Claus will return and open the box next Christmas and add some new attractions.

G. D. Colquitt is wearing an expansive smile nowadays. He is the proud father of a bouncing baby boy.

H. J. Redfield, of the Official Gazette chapel, was re-elected chairman last Monday. He is both capable and impartial.

George W. Graham has returned to work much improved in health, despite the amputation of his right foot. His friends are legion.

The many friends of Charles Garrells, of the proof room, expressed their sorrow at the death of his esteemed wife by sending a magnificent floral tribute.

At a recent chapel meeting, Robert H. Harstin was elected chairman of the Specification chapel, to succeed J. F. Hauer. About two years ago Mr. Harstin served as chairman of this chapel and proved an efficient official. His recent election is a deserved compliment.

A conversation between a customer and the leading "philanthropic" coal dealer of this city—the one who spoke so jocosely of the miners going on a six months' picnic, and who is now advertising that he has plenty of coal at from $12 to $20 a ton—was reported to me a few days ago. The would-be purchaser suggested that the dealer would lose all his customers when the price of coal again became normal. "Yes, I will," said the dealer; "I am 'on' to these bargain counter coal consumers. I am going to make all the money I can out of this situation, and when the supply again becomes plentiful, I will advertise to sell coal for 25 cents per ton less than the market price, and for every customer I lose I will gain three new ones?" And is he not right in his estimate of human nature?

Recently a member of this chapel approached me with some "poetry" for publication. Not being brave enough to father the "stuff," it did not appear in print. In addition thereto I frankly told the budding poet that his verses were both crude and rank, and consequently his soul is filled with malice toward me. This incident brings to memory an attempt of the Shah of Persia to rush into poetry. One fine day the Shah dashed off a poem and sent for an old bard to review it. The bard was more frank than diplomatic, and told his majesty that the poem lacked both sense and rhyme. The angered monarch called upon his servants to take the old fellow to the stables, where he was telescoped and given an emphatic spanking. A few weeks later the monarch was seized with another paroxysm of fancy and dashed off a few more lines of alleged verse. He again sent for the bard. Upon reading the "gush," the old fellow gravely shook his head and walked toward the stables. This time the Shah was so amused that he called the old fellow back and made him an inmate of the royal household. Well, in conclusion, should this particular "Spess" poet approach me with any more "stuff," I shall head for the "stables."

"Pride goes before a fall." This quotation is commended to some of the boys who took part in our recent entertainment.

Tim Shea can no longer deny that he is a "Foxy Grandpa." Tim recently returned from a trip home and he declares the baby is the finest in Hoboken.

Harry Glade has returned from a few days' trip in the North, and from his pleased expression one might reasonably infer that his "flyer" in December corn had been successful.

Will Poist's friends missed him along Lexington street Saturday night and were unable to account until they heard that there was a 14 pound girl at his home, a recent arrival; in fact, a Christmas gift.

Bob Stack has applied to Joe Gillin for membership in the Jonadabs for one year. Joe says he can not oblige Bob in this particular, but is willing to take him on probation if Bob will submit to a Keeley cure "shot."

'Gene Patsch stands between love and duty. He is thinking of changing his boarding house so that his violin practice will not be interfered with, but he hesitates to do so because of the attractions at his present place.

"Rube" Stockman has revealed himself. He was once a performer on a trapeze and might have still been doing stunts of that kind had he not had a fall. We are aware of the fact that "Rube" has had many falls in his life, though we never suspected him of being a trapeze performer. Out on you, Rube!

Ben Spellbring, better known as the "King of the West," made a big hit at the show and received an ovation when he appeared on the stage as Bili Bailey, with carpet bag in hand, coming home. But things were not so rosy for Ben on his way home from the show. He met some loafers who insulted a lady and Ben played the hero act. He took off his overcoat and while he was busy, one of the bunch put on Ben's coat and disappered whistling, "Bill Bailey, Won't You Come Home?"

The bookbinders' annual banquet will be held this year, probably at the Metropolitan Hotel, in February, and the tickets will be $2 each. It is confidently predicted that the one this year will surpass any of those given heretofore. The committee of arrangements, of whom tickets may be had, include: Wells C. Harrell, Gus Bouer, James Rutherford, John Weidman, M. McQueen, David O'Brien, George Henning, W. W. Taylor, Jake Weidman, William E. Gallagher, William H. Kelly, Robert T. Frailey, George Hassel, R. W. Brown, Harry Figg, Andy Bergerson, E. S. Luby, A. J. Tanner, Frank Wallace, J. W. Haslett, and W. H. Terry.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

The Man with the Scythe has been active among the newspaper fraternity during the old year, as witness the necrology: Maj Z K. Pangborn, Wm. H. Hemphill, Peter S. Hoe, E. L. Godkin, Walter N. Halderman, T. Dewitt Talmage, Amos J. Cummings, and Col. S. D. Bruce.

The Flying Star of Latter Day Journalism has startled Gotham by another innovation, changing the News from an evening to a morning paper, at the same time asserting that "there are thirty-six evening papers and only eight morning papers in New York and its immediate vicinity."

Mr. Munsey has reduced the price of his Boston paper from 2 to 1 cent. The Philadelphia Press and many other leading dailies have done likewise.

The Fourth Estate, in an able review of newspaperdom the past year, has the following paragraph under the head of "Labor": "There have been no strikes or lockouts of any great consequence, and the feeling between employer and employe is much more satisfactory than ever before. This is directly due to the excellent work accomplished by the labor committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, through whose efforts a five-year contract with the International Typographical Union was signed, under which all differences are settled by arbitration. For a time it looked as if there would be serious trouble in the paper making industry by the organization of a general strike in that trade, but this was happily settled, and at present the newspaper publishers have little to complain of except the continued high price of paper. That is, the publishers say it is high, while the paper makers insist that the price is as low as can be made"

All in touch with the world of labor can count on their finger tips instances of a disposition on the part of the forces above mentioned to "get together." Anent the high price of paper, representatives of several Metropolitan journals have been in Washington the past week arranging for an early meeting of leading publishers to urge upon Congress the importance of repealing the duty on wood pulp. A number of bills to this end have already been introduced and are on the files of the Ways and Means Committee.

The publishers expect to make a strong point of the fact that the gradual exhaustion of the supply of suitable timber which they formerly had to draw upon in the Lake States has removed all the protective value of the existing duty, and, as the publishing trade is now obliged to import heavily from Canada, the duty has become a burdensome tax on an important industry.

President Lynch, I learn, will be here at the same time.

THE target practice against the trusts, in which some of the crack shots have taken a hand, has revealed the fact that the experts are quite satisfied if the exhibition shows a near approach to the bull's eye and escapes the dangerous results that might follow the real hitting of it.

ON Tuesday last, while delivering himself of some pent-up opinions concerning the evils of vast accumulations by the individual few during the past thirty years, Senator HOAR, at one point, made use of the following suggestion: "Suppose some Napoleon of finance should come into the control of a thousand million dollars, would not that possibility be a real public danger? Such a power can make wars or it can prevent wars. It can threaten a community with a coal famine or a wheat famine, and it can execute its threat." Mr. HOAR in support of his bill arranged the trusts under ten separate and distinct indictments and took occasion to express his disapproval of government ownership of the great labor employing agencies, including coal mines and railroads.

IT was brought out in the testimony before the Coal Mining Commission, at its session in Philadelphia on Tuesday, that it is the practice of the companies to pay the costs for protection of property, supposedly by reason of powers granted by the State to corporations in directing their deputized forces in times of disturbance. Chairman Gray expressed his surprise at this extraordinary innovation by the use of the following concise language: "I am not familiar with such an un-American law. When the county or the State relinquishes the duty of maintaining order, protecting life, and keeping the peace then matters are reaching a sorry state." During the cross-examination of Sheriff Schadt by President Mitchell, the sheriff admitted that he had employed about fifty deputies which the coal companies had paid for.

Benjamin Franklin.

One hundred and ninety seven years ago, January 6, 1706, was born to the world a child of destiny, who at a very early age took rank among the leading thinkers of his time. With this man life was a serious matter. The lack of early school advantages and other hindrances seemingly tended to stimulate and make stronger his purpose to overcome obstacles which would have discouraged a character less resolute. The story of the early struggles of BENJAMIN FRANKLIN is one familiar to most printers, and many an office boy or apprentice while chafing under the discipline practiced by the old-time editor or publisher (or, as was usual, the two combined in one) has found consolation and the hope of ultimate reward by reference to those pages which told of the privations endured, the discouragements overcome, and the success which came to FRANKLIN, who by his own inherent genius and plodding industry reached a summit of fame unequaled by any who belonged to that period which gave to the world its most profound thinkers, foremost patriots, greatest philosophers, and wisest statesmen.

It is not easy to condense into the narrow limits of a newspaper column even a passing reference to a life at first so humble and which in its fullness was so fruitful with blessings and good to mankind, neither is the attempt necessary. "His country," says BIGELOW, "owes much to FRANKLIN for his service in various public capacities. The world owes much to the fruits of his pen; but his greatest contribution to the welfare of mankind probably was what he did by his example and life to dignify manual labor. While DIDEROT was teaching the dignity of labor in France and the folly of the social standards that proscribed it, FRANKLIN was illustrating it in America and proving by his own most conclusive example that 'Honor and fame from no conditions rise.' There are few born into this world so ill conditioned that they can not find comfort and encouragment from some portion of the life of FRANKLIN; none of any station who may not meditate on it with advantage."

FRANKLIN, above all others, who began at the foot of the ladder as practical printer, is entitled to first place on the scroll of fame, while yet we recall the names and services of the lamented GREELEY, CHILDS, and CUMMINGS, each of whom and others not here mentioned have reared for themselves imperishable monuments by deeds which have endeared them to members of the "craft" everywhere.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

"Buffalo Jerry" Sullivan, having seen a reference of mine to Rus McQuillen a couple of weeks ago, told me a recollection of "Mickey" McQuillen's arrival in Buffalo some years ago. ("Mickey" is Jerry's name for him.) He said that McQuillen, a big, brawny stereotyper, and "another nigger," as Billy Moorhead was wont to say, arrived on top of a freight, on a dark night, and as the train was hung up for a time, waiting for a signal, McQ thought they were in the yard and dropped off. It happened that his car was standing on the bridge over Buffalo Creek, and when he dropped he went into the creek, which, from the waste of factories, oil mills, etc., was nothing but slime and ooze. McQ. began to yell for help, when one of the train men sang out:

"Walk ashore, you d——d fool! It ain't more'n four feet deep."

Which being true, Rus did so Later on the stereotyper rushed into a saloon up town and asked for the proprietor, saying that there was a man dying out on the sidewalk. The crowd rushed out, and there was poor McQuillen lying insensible, with his mouth open. He was carried inside and a bed made of two tables, on which he was laid. Said the stereotyper:

"Give me some whisky!"

A glassful was handed him and he poured it into McQuillen, whose mouth immediately flew open again, he remaining unconscious. A half dozen glasses of whisky were dumped into him, with no apparent result. Then the stereotyper grabbed a beer "schuper" (if you've ever been in Buffalo you know a "schuper" is about the biggest beer glass you ever saw), filled it half full of beer, poured in two glasses of whisky, a teaspoonful of Tabasco sauce, then unscrewed a hand lamp and filled the "schuper" up the rest of the way with coal oil, and poured the whole mess into McQuillen. In a minute the invalid had recovered, and for the rest of the evening was the liveliest man in the party.

This shows the wicked things that drinking men will resort to.

I have received an invitation to attend the eighteenth annual banquet of the Old Time Printers' Association of Chicago, to be given on Monday evening, January 19, 1903, at the Sherman House, in honor of the birthday of Benjamin Franklin. The committee of arrangements are Joseph C. Snow, chairman; William Mill, secretary (to whom I am indebted for the courtesy of the invitation); Samuel Rastall, Fred K. Tracy, Charles N. Bond, P. J. Cahill, John Gordon, M. H. Madden, and D. J. Hines—all familiar names to those acquainted in Chicago twenty five or thirty years ago. By the way, I believe I will avail myself of this opportunity to make an apology, as publicly as was the offense, for speaking of Mrs. William Mill as a Swede in one of my articles, when in fact the lady is of Norwegian descent. My defense is that Ned Kerrott told me so. I had the pleasure of meeting Billy Mill and his charming daughter at Cincinnati last summer, the former for the first time since 1872, quite a bunch of years before the latter was born, for Mill was not married until several years after our last previous meeting.

Q. Why can't we have an Old Time Printers' Association here?

A. Because it would cost 30 or 40 cents a year.

Sam English, of the "Spess," was reminded by my recent story about Sam Hoyt of his own brief acquaintance with him. In 1880, English broke into Elmira on his first trip away from home and succeeded in getting work, and alongside of him was Sam Hoyt. It was Hoyt's first day too, but English didn't know that. After they had been at work an hour or so, Hoyt said:

"I'm feeling awful bad. I foolishly left the car window open on my trip from Rochester, and I've got a terrible cold. I left my pocketbook on the piano and I haven't a cent with me. Let me have 25 cents to go out and get some medicine."

English had only a silver dollar and he told him to take that out and get it changed. Hoyt went out, but never did return. After a while the foreman asked English:

"What has become of Hoyt—the man beside you?"

"He said he foolishly left the car window open coming here and caught a cold, and he's gone out to get some medicine," said English.

"Left the car window open, did he?" said the foreman, and he laughed loud and long. "Say, youngster, that fellow hasn't rode in a car that had windows for fifteen years. The trucks—that's where he rides."

Hoyt had set about a thousand, and that was given to English to partly reimburse him.

The Third Division Relief Association has been organized, on the plan of the G. P. O. Mutual, the Cooperative, the Columbia, and others, with a membership of 47 to begin with, to pay $10 a week sick benefits. The officers are W. G. Glenn, president; Frank Hoover, vice president; C. J. Sheriff, secretary, and Nat. G. Watts, treasurer. It starts out under favorable auspices and ought to have a successful career. This will make about a half a dozen of these associations connected with the office, and they do a splendid work.

If my esteemed con emporary, W. T. Menard, had carefully noticed my Specification article to which he referred last week, he would have observed that it was my friend Jim Dump's opinion that I was quoting, and not my own. I have had a couple of whirls on "Spess," though it was years ago, and I never had any trouble there. And I'll further state that I am not making any cracks about resigning if "sent to the case" on "Spess" or anywhere else.

The grafters of the entire country must be impressed with the ease with which Government employes can be separated from their money, for almost every mail brings offers of "good things" by which they charitably desire to make us rich. Mining stock is worked somewhat yet, but not so much as a few years ago. Suburban building lots near this and other large cities are still in favor. Of Texas oil I haven't heard anything for a year or two, but that industry throve for a while. I heard of a departmental lady who put $1,000 into an oil scheme on which they were to pay her handsome dividends, and they actually did pay her back $200 of her own money, and then they quit. A gentleman sold $48,000 worth of town lots in Duluth, Minn., in the Departments here a few years ago, when he did not own a foot of ground there, and there was no such a tract there as he described. A few years ago there was a wonderful boom in real estate at Rockville, Md., when good corn land, worth $25 or $30 an acre, was cut up into $200 town lots for the gudgeon trade, and I believe there has been a boom sale of building lots every three miles between here and there within the past ten years. Kind philanthropists offer us free tickets to New York to inspect suburban property which they almost offer to give us, when there are millions of real-estate-hungry money in New York. Racing stables—but I guess I won't say anything further about this industry, as two or three feeders have jumped me about what I have said heretofore. Well, why should not the boys enjoy themselves? Mr. T. B. Brown, foreman of the State printing office at Topeka, Kans., has sent me a copy of the "Story of the Seventh Kansas," by Adjutant-General S. M. Fox, of Kansas, being advance sheets of an article to be published in the report of the Kansas State Historical Society. The Seventh Kansas Cavalry was the famous "Jayhawker" regiment during the rebellion, and was commanded by Col. C. R. Jennison, and by some means it acquired quite a reputation in the West for alleged predatory habits. Whatever depredations were committed by any army to which it was attached were always charged to the "Seventh Kansas," and whenever a soldier thief was caught red handed he always swore that he belonged to the "Seventh Kansas." It was a good fighting regiment and undoubtedly it was much maligned by its enemies.

The Union's entertainment last Friday night had to contend with about as foul weather as could be dealt out, but for all that a fair house enjoyed the delightful programme which the committee had provided. I think it is a mistake to set the date of any affair of the kind nearer than two weeks of the holidays. The bookbinders exceeded us in financial results, but I am told that every member of their union took five tickets. Such a thing would have caused numerous cases of heart failure in our ranks.

I hope no one will feel disappointed that his name was not in my string of nominations for delegate last week, for I intend to publish a supplemental list shortly. I did not near exhaust the amount of good material that the union contains. I am open to suggestions for the amended list

Treasury Branch.

James Willis is taking part of his leave.

C. P. Boss has been transferred to the main office and assigned to the Fifth Division.

Theo. Reier, one of our pressman, is confined to his home in Baltimore with throat trouble.

Miss Annie F. Leonard, of the press room, was absent from the office several days during Christmas week.

Miss Teresa McDevitt, of the folding room, has been transferred to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Miss F. K. Harkness, of the press room, is quite sick with typhoid fever at Providence Hospital. All wish for her speedy recovery.

W. H. Hartman was assigned to this division as a temporary on Monday. Bill's many friends were glad to welcome him in our midst.

Miss Nellie Blair, of the press room, had the misfortune to lose $3 last Friday morning as she was coming to the office. Rather a bad start for the new year.

"Pard" Bloomer was quite generous with our division in suggesting names for the coming delegate race, Edward Y. Fisher and Alfred K. Mundheim being members of this force.

W. Brice Coston, who retired as Regent of Capitol Council, Royal Arcanum, at the end of the year, was presented with a handsome ring by the council upon vacating the chair.

Allison and Ferl, who resigned from this division last February to accept positions in the Goverment Printing Office, at Manila, P. I., remembered their old friends when Christmas came, each sending cigars to all the boys.

Bookbinders Entertain.

On New Year's eve, December 31, 1902, the Bookbinders' Society gave their annual entertainment and hop at National Rifles' Armory. The proceeds are to be used for benefit and burial purposes.

The committee having the matter in charge was composed of Messrs. C. F. Weston, S. Mayberry, P. R. Flanagan, Thos. Esperon, D. J. Chute, C. B. Welch, C. J. Cassidy, W. H. Figg, W. W. Taylor, W. H. Oliver, and F. S. Wallace.

The entertainment of the evening consisted of a musical extravaganza entitled "A Night on the Lawn." The cast numbered fifty men and woman selected from the bindery unions.

The bones were J. Irwin Esterly, Andrew Bergeson, and Ben Silversten; tambos, Ben Spellbring, Thomas Esperson, and Phil Deekins. Solos were sung by the end men, and Eleanor Frost sang a song written by James L Feeney. The entertainment closed with a vaudeville olio presented by Anna Cluss, Barrett and Kirby, and Weston and Warren.

Dancing followed the entertainment.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES

Columbia Union Yearbook.

To Whom It May Concern:

The completion of the Yearbook has been delayed by the non-arrival of printing paper for two signatures—the last 16 pages of the book. The plans of the Committee and the printers of the volume (THE TRADES UNIONIST) to issue the book on January 1 could not be carried out for the above named reason. When the paper, ordered November 1, was examined prepatory to using it, the discovery was made that a quantity was damaged, perhaps in transit. The order was at once renewed so that the amount damaged could be restored. The bill of lading, received by the firm in this city from whom the paper was purchased, shows that it was shipped from the mills December 22, and should have been in Washington four days later. The efforts to locate the paper by a tracer and get it out of the freight blockade, occasioned by the condition of the coal traffic, have not yet been successful, but it is believed that the paper will soon be located and forwarded. When it is received the completion of the presswork and binding (the book is all in type) will be pushed as rapidly as permissible, consistent with good work, so that the book will be in the hands of the craft and the public at the earliest possible date.

THE PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Down Town.

The Allied Printing Trades Council will hold their election on Thursday, January 29. Secretary Weidman, who is filling the unexpired term of A. T. Campbell, who accepted a positien out of the city, is a candidate for said position. John makes a good and progressive secretary.

John P. McDowell, of Chicago, for the last year on the Night Bill Force at the G. P. O, had the honor of being No. 1 on the recently announced Civil Service Commission eligible list, he having made an average of 93.6. Mr. McDowell received a probationary appointment on Tuesday last.

President M. G. Scott, of New York Typographical Union, No. 6, has sent out announcements to members of the Cummings Memorial Committee that a meeting of said body will be held at Typographical Temple, this city, on Thursday, January 15, at 3 o'clock p. m President Lynch, of the I. T. U., will be present as will also President Joe M. Johnson, of Columbia Union, who is a member of said committee.

At the last meeting of Columbia Typographical Union a proposition was introduced by F. C. Roberts providing for a pronounced change in the method of collecting dues and issuing cards. The matter was referred to a special committee of three, consisting of Messrs. Brockwell, Garrett, and Radley. On Sunday next, at 3.30, at the Temple, the committee will meet, and those interested (especially chairmen) are cordially invited to be present and exchange views with the committee and each other.

Call at 211 H street northwest and look at the nice, comfortable rooms; charges moderate.

Proof-room Pencil Points.

All honor to an Administration that remembers the Government Printing Office when hole-day favors are dispensed.

Mr. John Henry Boner (bard of Yadkin), who has been sadly afflicted during the past few years, is able to occupy his desk only at brief intervals.

Appearances indicated on last Monday morning, that the holiday season had dealt kindly with all the pen and pencil artists of this division, only bright, smiling faces and no vacant chairs being in evidence.

The energies and erudition of the polyglots Burnstein, Burklin, and Pafflow (descendants of Czar and Kaisar subjects) have been recently taxed to the utmost to make the Congressional Catalogue intelligible to its readers of every tribe and tongue.

The bookworms of the Proof Room are baffled by the Second Division man's quotation. In vain do they search for "Be ye always ready, for Death cometh as a thief in the night." Possibly, with prophetic eye, he saw this in a work to be issued in the time to come. It is quite probable, too, that Burns wrote "makes countless millions mourn" and his transcriber made it "thousands."

The adverse criticisms of the literary and musical efforts of "Bill" Reed and his Proof Room associates on the day preceding the celebration of the anniversary of the advent of the world's Redeemer have almost persuaded them that the whole proceeding was an anomaly as to time and place. Such hoary compositions as "Auld Lang Syne," "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," and the "Sermon on the Mount," having been relegated to the rear, the proper (?) seasonal "capah" of the inimitable "Bill" would have been to have martialed and marched the Proof Room host to a neighboring Swamp-poodle dispensary, where, moved by "spirits," "Johnny, Fill Up the Bowl," and other like spirit inspiring songs might have been lustily and hilariously rendered with happy effect, between which and to "have something" stories of the burning qualities of Jersey sands and Jersey lightning and the bumming acts of typo tourists might have been pleasingly related. Our holiday indiscretion has cost us dear, and bowing our heads in shame, we are moved to say:

Oh! noble bats and bums,
With noses painted by rhys and rums,
We thy pardon humbly crave,
And promise never more to so behave.

FARE.

You can be accommodated with a nice, home-like room at 211 H street northwest; charges reasonable.

Columbia Union Dance.

Notwithstanding the inclement condition of the weather on Friday night, January 2, 1903, a goodly number of patrons assembled at National Rifles' Armory, 916 G street northwest, to participate in the entertainment and hop given under the auspices of the Entertainment Committee of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101. Much credit is due the committee for the excellent program presented, as follows: Vaudeville program preceded by Pistorio's superb orchestra. During this, which formed the first part of the evening, Thomas L. Jones, an excellent tenor, sang "Queen of the Earth." Leo Rullmann followed in clever feats of juggling. H. M. Wills, elocutionist, recited "The Debating Society" with fine success. He later gave a unique recitation. Mrs. Margaret Koontz Holland sang a ballad and a fetching Japanese love song. George H. O'Connor sang a coon song. G. W. Harvell, a ventriliquist and a lightning change artist, did an interesting sketch. Samuel Gompers, jr., played a banjo solo. Mrs. Hattie Meads-Smith sang "Love Is the Queen of the Sea." A barytone solo was sung by R. R. Roderick.

Dancing, which was indulged in by many, then followed.

The proceeds are to be used in relief of needy members.

The officers in charge of the arrangements were as follows: Thomas L Jones, chairman; John R Purvis, T. J. Fitzwilliam, B E. Harrison, Miss Nellie Theaker, Thos. F. Harris, and Philip Nachman.

Reception Committee—Miss Nellie Theaker, chairman; Miss Josepha Lange, Miss Annie Wilson, Miss Iowa Hampson, Miss Ruth M. Eisenhour, Miss Marion Booth, Miss Cornelia Brown, Miss Katherine Spencer, Miss Carrie Whitehead, Miss Mary Connoly, and Miss Louise Gunton.

Navy Branch.

B. H. Ackert is the unanimous choi of this chapel for delegate to the International Convention which meets in this city in August. He is well and popularly known, not only as one of the foremost of his craft, but as a genial, accommodating, good-natured gentleman. Mr. Ackert, we hope, will get the support of our entire membership, as he is too able a man to be allowed to remain humbly in the ranks.

Bricklayers' Executive Committee.

The following is the list of members of the Executive Committee of Bricklayers' Union, No. 1: John G. Wolfe, chairman, 1023 New Jersey avenue; W. Cronin, 1415 Thirty sixth street northwest; Charles R. Clarkson, 321 South Lee street, Alexandria, Va.; Frank Bugden, 313 Polk street, Anacostia; J. W. Furtner, 22 Quncy street northwest.

It is estimated by Lord Cromer, the British agent in Egypt, that the Assouan dam, that has cost about $12,500,000, will increase the agricultural earning power of Egypt $13,000,000 every year—in other words, that it will pay a percentage of over 100 every twelve months.

Proclaimed the Best.

Many fraternal orders of the United States competed for the Paris Exposition medal, but the Woodman of the World captured the much coveted prize. A special commission was appointed to examine the various plans, documents, history, system of business, etc., of the competing orders, and so superior were those of the W. O. W. that a diploma of merit was also awarded it. Enough said. Address 72 Eye street northeast for literature. 1t

Specification Scintillations.

Rumor says the Spess Division is to be assigned the old First Division, which will give sufficient room and be generally acceptable.

Capt. E. D. Smoot says that he was misrepresented recently in the columns of this paper. His neighbors in Vienna, Va., have recovered their lost chickens.

Judging from his ability as a rusher to make the first elevator, Charley Welsh, of the Bindery force, must have played half back or bareback on the Moyamensing college team in his boyhood days.

R. B. Topham, added to this force recently, is an old Spess comp., and was a noted baseball crank in the days when the goats used to eat up baseballs and other indigestibles in the Swampoodle district.

Nearly 300 people are now employed in this division, including 1 foreman, 1 assistant foreman, 40 readers and copyholders, 14 makers-up and imposers, 3 pressmen, 6 feeders, 17 helpers and laborers, and of the 200 compositors about one-fourth are ladies.

Edward Mullery, one of the popular labor force of this division, has been ill for some time, but is expecting to be able to return soon. Mr. Mullery served Uncle Sam in the artillery for thirty years, and has a fund of humor and experience that makes him a general favorite.

Frank E. Munsey has changed his New York Evening News to a morning paper. Mr. Munsey has proven himself a very successful magazine publisher, but there is a vast difference between that and the newspaper business, and, judging from his Washington publication, I don't think he is going to set the world on fire.

At the January meeting of the Union Mutual Relief Association the following officers were installed to serve during 1903: President, Geo. R. Ramsey; vice-president, George W. Hall; secretary-treasurer, Ed. R. French; board of directors, Miss Laura B. Gordon, Mrs. Irma D Palmer, Miss Fannie Levy, Messrs. J. W. Carter, S. A. Wakefield, and Joseph Stecker. The finance committee appointed by the President is: Fred E. Weber, chairman; Wm. Howlin, and Miss Allie Trefts. The Union starts the fourth year of its existence with a membership of 222. Resolutions thanking Fred E. Weber, retiring president; Ed. R French, secretary treasurer, and the 1902 finance committee (Messrs. Frank E. Buckland, chairman; Arthur H. Frisbee, and Miss Laura B. Gordon) for past services, were adopted and ordered spread upon the minutes.

X-Ray.

No Devlin Now in the Third.

The boys of the Third Division of the G. P. O. have lost a worthy young associate in the person of Dr. J. P. Devlin, who has dropped the "stick" to take up the "forceps," having just hung up his dentist sign at 905 K street northwest. Without any thought of Devlin the Dr., we hope he will be as happy in his new venture as a man can be who has to "look down in the mouth" for a living, and while this hope is premediated, not acci-dental, we know full well that he will have to "pull out" pretty lively to get up his "average," as not a few of us have to do where he left us. All the same, we trust that his "impressions" in the dental art will all be as perfect as are the good impressions he made among us. And so we all say, including Slug 360.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

In the days of ten or a dozen years ago John Raedy had a couple of ferrets in his place to rid it of rats, and one morning when Colonel Tebbetts came in to see what time it was one of them came out from among the barrels in full view.

"Look at that, Dick," said the Colonel to Dick Kennedy, who was trying to sell Raedy some coal, pointing at the ferret.

"Look at what?" said Dick. "That row of barrels?"

"No; that animal," the Colonel insisted. "See it, Jim?" to Jim Stewart, who had dropped in to warm his hands on his way to work.

"What animal?" asked Jim, who had caught Dick's wink.

"You fellows can go to h——," roared the Colonel. "Johnny, give me some r-r-r-rainwater!"

What wicked boys we were in the days before we got to singing "The Sermon on the Mount" on the day preceding Christmas!

Nothing could have been farther from my intention than to permanently discourage the interesting paragraphers of the Fourth, and we all miss the cheerful items formerly furnished. Hasn't Dud Fleming got a new story—ask him—nor anybody seen Grant Barnhart's purple and green suspenders?

In England and such English provinces as have not been Americanized it is the custom for the barmaids and barmen to measure out a customer's drink to him. I once went into the barroom of French's Hotel, in New York, where the World building now stands, to see if I could find a bootblack, and while there a couple of just-landed Englishmen came in.

"A quartern of gin," said one of them.

The barkeeper set the bottle and glasses before them.

"'Ere's a rum go, 'Arry," said the buyer. "We'd better stay 'ere. We'll never find another place where they'll let us 'elp hourselves."

Ed Thomas looked into the Riggs House bar, while the big American-Canadian boat race was on here about fifteen years ago, to see if LeGrand Dakin had any corn plasters, when a couple of Canadians came in and called for whisky. The bibulous implements being set out, one poured his glass level full, drank half of it, and handed the remainder to his friend, who finished it.

"It's a quarter just the same," said Dakin.

"Give us a cent's worth of rum in two glasses," said the spendthrift from Uncle Zide Ross' Vermont town; "what do we care for expenses when we're on a bust?"

Let us sing:

Should auld acquaintance be forgot?
That everlasting whine!
Now ope your face, your tuneful slot,
And wipe away your brine.

As different dates of the birth of Franklin were given in different places in last week's paper, it may make things clearer to state that that great man was born January 6, 1706, old style, corresponding to January 17, 1706, new style, the latter date being given in all the encyclopedias. It was in 1752 that dates were jumped forward eleven days to bring the time up to the Gregorian calendar, which was substituted for the Julian calendar by English speaking people about that time—a piece of information not necessary to The Trades Unionist's intelligent clientele, but thrown in as a make-weight.

The late "Bones" Noyes, for years a proofreader in the G. P. O., who died ten or twelve years ago, had one peculiarity with which every one who knew him was acquainted—he always wore his hat, at work, at table, everywhere, and he would go nowhere that he could not wear it. The only man within my knowledge who ever saw him with his hat off was John Thomas—poor, afflicted John—and he knocked it off in a spirit of devilment one day. "Bones" got so angry that the joke was never repeated.

The other day I picked up a card worded "Dr. W. P. Liggett, dentist; office, 1314 F street N. W." Dr. Liggett was for a number of years a compositor in the G. P. O., but becoming disconnected from the service fifteen or sixteen years ago, he began the practice of his profession. After a few years he returned to the office for a brief time, but has now for several years had a very comfortable practice. I am glad to note the success of any of our G. P. O. people. By the way, understanding that some "medicine doctors" object to dentists bearing the title "Doctor," it occurs to me that as "doctor" literally means "teacher," or a person who has passed all the degrees of a faculty and has received a diploma, nobody has a copyright on the term. There are doctors of laws, doctors of philosophy, doctors of music, doctors of theology, doctors of dentistry, and doctors of horses, as well as doctors of medicine. The Indian name "medicine man" is less likely to be misunderstood than "doctor."

A. P. Marston, who has recently received a substantial promotion to a position attached to the office of the foreman of printing, the exact title of which I do not know, but which gives him a comfortable increase of salary, has submitted to my inspection a copy of "Robinson Crusoe" which has a history. It is one of an edition printed, bound, and sold by striking printers and bookbinders in Philadelphia in 1850, out of which strike grew the present Typographical Union of that city. F. M. Detweiler, sr., of the printing firm of Judd & Detweiler, was one of the printers engaged on the work, and shortly after that he came to this city. The book is pretty well battered up in its bindings and seems to have been water soaked, but speaks well for the workmanship of the men engaged on it, both as to text and illustrations. Mr. Marston, as all the older members know, was president of this union in 1887 and delegate to Detroit in 1878 and to Denver in 1889.

* * * *

Though I am not ready yet to publish my supplementary list of candidates for delegate, I will now bring forward the name of R. A. Nelgner, of the Night Third. Having been all around the world, his ambition for travel is satisfied and he will be willing to represent our union in her own city.

Somebody told me a story about Dick Worcester's first introduction into the office which sounds apocryphal, but is rather pretty. When, over a year ago, the office was putting on a good many temporaries, Dick applied to Mr. Ricketts for work and, succeeding, was told to report at 8 o'clock the next morning.

"I don't want day work," said Dick; "I want to work at night."

"You don't expect to run the office the first day, do you," asked the private secretary.

"Well, you wouldn't be making a mistake if you put me in charge of it," said Dick.

He got on the night shift.

A "genial little friend" of mine in the Day Proof Room surely does give me some knock-down blows because of my mention of their ante-Christmas exercises. He signs himself "Fare," I think as a sort of conscience-fund acknowledgment of the days when he didn't pay any, and when he truly realized the words, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." I see his recollection of Christmas observances in "Auld Lang Syne" is good, though it has been years since he sang "Johnny, Fill Up the Bowl" and said, "Have sumpin." I sure would like to have heard Bill Reed's noble voice singing the "Sermon on the Mount," and if I had known that was on the programme I never would have written a word. I never intended to inflict the degree of humiliation indicated by the splay-footed verse with which the article is tearfully closed. Heavens, no! I am not inhuman!

* * * *

A long time ago Aleck Pope wrote:

Honor and shame from no condition rise;
Act well your part, look wise, and advertise—

but the "shame" is frequently misquoted "fame" by well informed people, and I don't know but what it is the more desirable word, but it is not what Aleck wrote, if anybody should want to bet you.

Of all the nominations for delegate made by me a couple of weeks ago, Mr. Doocy is the only one who declines. With the volunteer candidates who will be coming along, it looks as though we might have a pretty full field. This is the year to run, boys. Sixty dollars and no dusty, dirty railway journey.

When I wrote two or three weeks ago about the puerility of Washington papers in never mentioning each other's names, I had no idea of stirring up such abuse of each other as the Times and Star have indulged in lately. They could better put in their time Machen pennies.

* * * *

My friend John Crowe, ex-delegate, of Philadelphia, now a Night Third temporary, has the true stuff in him. Though he expects to be here but a few weeks he gives his name into the Ex-Delegates' Association.

Are any of you fellows going to help me write this paper? If you loafed around whisky shops less and wrote more, you'd have more money and we'd have a better paper. Johnny Kiernan will agree with me that that is a Fare proposition.

Another of W. E. Shields's interesting letters reached me the other day. Among the matters of information in it, Carlos Tomlin threatens to finish his education on "the machine" as soon as he gets ready to go to work. "Shanty" House, known everywhere in the years agone, is roaming around Colorado, getting old. Denver printers pay $2 a month dues, and have voted to furnish a room at the Home. Why can't we, the second strongest union in the country, do as much to help that noble charity?

If you ask the newspaper man to give So-and-so a send-off, don't you think it's up to you to send So-and so a paper, if he's off the range? Send-offs always interest the man written about more than anyone else.

Sidney Marye, of Spess, is a Fantastic Fellow of Virginia, and he is in the habit of bringing "things," principally animals, from his native wilds to the office. Last week he brought a screech owl that he had captured, and raffled it off, the result returning the owl to the primeval forests—that is, Woods won it.

They had a spirited contest for chapel officers in the Day Third last week, resulting in the election of William McEnaney, chairman, over Frank Wright, and Hindman Doxey, secretary, over Burton and Martin. I am told there was quite a fight made on my friend Doxey, but it didn't pan out enough votes to beat him.

My friend Bill Sill, of Spess, is a big man. He used to go without socks so that he could wear a smaller boot than nature intended, which gave rise to a brutal story that Tom Billings got off about his socks sticking in his boots when he pulled them off. He wears an 18-inch collar, and his face corresponds with the size of his feet and neck. He is just as good natured as he is big, too, else he wouldn't stand for the anecdotes the fellows tell on him. Last Saturday night the barber shops closed before some of the other places and Bill forgot to get shaved—a job that is steady employment for any barber for half an hour—so on Sunday morning he hiked over to Gloster Roberts, of the Record, a fellow-Jawjawan, who lives near by, and asked to borrow his razor.

"Certainly," said Gloster, "if you haven't got one."

"Mine is out of order," said Bill.

"A 'safety' is all I have, but you are welcome to use that," said Gloster.

Bill lathered up and went to work. A "safety" cuts only about an inch swath, and for a solid hour he trundled the little lawn mower over his face before he had his crop all down.

"I don't think much of a 'safety' razor," said Bill.

"I guess you'd get more expedition out of a jack plane," said Gloster.

Charlie Duffy showed me an interesting souvenir he has of the "way back" in the 80's, in the shape of a letter he received at Seattle from his friend "J. C. D.," who had just gone to San Jose. It is all written in rhyme, and while containing nothing that would interest readers here, it is a very smooth specimen of versesmithing. Mr. Duffy is very busy with a new boy baby now, I hear.

Bindery Notes.

Have you seen Bill Glovers' high silk hat? Its a peach.

Captain White, the living wonder of the Bindery, known as the ossified man, is looking for a wife.

Adam Sommers' horse wanted a drink so bad New Year's day that he went in the basement after it.

The Major is not enjoying the same "prosperity" he formerly basked in since the recent transfer of his "angel."

Henry Scheurman was elected arbitration member to represent the Cowboys, Kelly refusing to serve any longer.

All rumors to the effect that "Fatty" Fitz is going to Albany to bring the recalcitrants in line for Senator Platt are unfounded.

Sam Childs gave a "sausage party" in Baltimore the other night. He was training for the feed to be given soon by the Roof Garden.

There appears to be a conflict of authority between Bill Haslett and Bob Stack over the "sausage" party. Get together there, fellows.

It is feared that Mike Dunn's New Year's resolution not to "fool" any more will result as most other resolutions made at the same time.

It is reported that George Barnes was not as successful at the last seance as formerly. Some think that he did not use the proper "dope" on his opponents.

Baldenecker is growing sentimental in his old age. He is now engaged in writing passionate poems for the edification of some of the ladies in the sewing room.

Some one recommended a Bermuda onion to George Reynolds for a sore throat, but he indignantly refused on the ground that it would cause a serious breach in his domestic affairs.

Momus Club to Entertain.

The first 1903 banquet of the Momus Club is fixed for next Sunday night, the 18th inst., at Hotel Regent. The committee announce that the number will positively be limited to 125, and all names must be turned in to the general committee not later than Thursday evening.

It is expected that some well-known members of the theatrical attractions to be in town next week will be present and take part in the evening's entertainment.

Among the speakers are Hon. Charles F. Cochran, of Missouri; Hon. W. P. Browlow, of Tennessee; Joe M. Johnson, president of Columbia Union; Frank Kidd, Samuel Ellis, Frank Hall, and T. A. Bynum.

W. S. McKean, jr., is the chairman, and F. N. Whitehead will officiate as "the whip."

The program arranged gives promise of a very enjoyable evening's entertainment, as does the menu selected.

The general committee will issue table cards as per the table arrangement from 5:30 to 8 on the evening of the dinner.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL WASHINGTON 2

THURSDAY, JANUARY 15, 1903.

CONGRESS yesterday removed one length of the tariff fence by agreeing to a measure to remove the duty on all imported coal for one year. The vote favoring the proposition was almost unanimous. And the President signed the bill.

WINNIE D. MERCER, a pitcher of the American baseball team, committed suicide at San Francisco, Cal., on Monday of this week, by asphyxiation. MERCER had just recently been made manager of the Detroit team. He was well and favorably known to the Washington baseball public.

ONE day the divinely appointed GEORGE III BAER is reported as saying that the scarcity of coal is due to the fact that the miners did not work on Christmas and New Year, and the next day we are told that there's plenty of coal mined and ready for shipment but it is impossible to get the cars; and as to prices, the operators and local dealers are calling each other liars, while the public believe that each are telling the truth about each other.

AN appalling accident occurred at the skating rink, near the Washington Monument, about 6 o'clock last evening, when a party of ladies and gentlemen, numbering some twelve or fifteen, were precipitated into the water by venturing upon thin ice, from which they had been repeatedly warned. Three lives were lost and others marvelously escaped. The dead are: Miss JESSIE E. THOMAS, librarian at the Bureau of Ethnology, Mr. HENTY C. HAMILL, clerk in the War Department, and Mr. ARTHUR WASSERBACK, of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

WHEN it became evident that the coal-famine prices were likely to raid plethoric purses and that the dwellers in palaces as well as those of the hovel would be treated to the shivers, then it was that an ominous howl went up and even the Congress set itself to work to devise "ways and means" to relieve the stringency. It is fortunate, in some respects, that the present suffering is not wholly confined to the very poor or to those of moderate circumstances. The miners and their families suffered for months from short rations of food and insufficient shelter and otherwise endured the scoffs and persecutions of the evictors and their hired assassins.

THE recently-announced scheme of the United States Steel Corporation to its employes, by which it is proposed to make them sharers in the surplus and dividends, has the string attachment and robs the proposition of any real benefit which might otherwise accrue, inasmuch as the terms proposed include the obligation to surrender individual liberty by denying to the employe the right to quit the service of the Corporation until the expiration of a stipulated period. By indirection the proposition is a notice served upon the individual as a member of the labor organization to which he may belong that it would not be the part of wisdom to offer resistance or seek to change any intolerable condition which the Corporation through its management might at any time see fit to impose. Briefly stated, the "concession," as it is called, is a cunningly-devised scheme to tempt the employe into a bargain which takes from him the thing of greater value and which by purchase makes him the fettered and abject slave of the Corporation.

"Join or Die."

—Legend on Revolutionary flag.

The papers a week or two ago contained mention that the navy-yard employes were very much dissatisfied and disappointed that they had not been permitted to have a half holiday the day before New Year's, as all other Government employes had. So sure were they of getting it that they had gone to work in the morning without their noonday lunches, and they had to buy food, go hungry, or lose half a day. There is a great natural contempt for a workingman in the breasts of army and navy officers, and as the navy-yard is under the control of officers of the navy, it is no trouble for them to show goods. When the eight-hour law was passed, about 1868, it was decided by navy officers that it did not apply to the navy-yard, and that if it did the employes had a right to contract to work a longer time, and for ten or twelve years these workmen were deprived of privileges granted by Congress to all employes of the Government. There were afterwards suits in the Court of Claims to require the Government to pay these men for the extra time extorted from them, but the statute of limitations got in its deadly work. In a hundred ways have the workmen there had to suffer from the arrogant disregard of their rights displayed by the navy-yard officials. The machinists are divided into first, second, third, and fourth classes, with pay ranging from $2 36 to $3 20 per day, and under no conditions are more than 50 per cent of them permitted to be in the first class. Notices of union meetings have been torn down by navy officers and their aversion to the union exhibited in many ways.

The remedy for the machinists is in thorough organization. It is true they have a lodge of the I. A. M., but it does not comprise a controlling number of the workmen. The navy officers combat it with the Navy-Yards Protective Association, which has neither the objects nor the elements of a trade union, and employes are encouraged by the authorities to belong to the latter organization. If the machinists, who comprise much the greater number of skilled workmen in the navy-yard, will join their machinists' union, they will wield a power and gain a support from other labor organizations that will command respect for their rights. They will be the footballs and punching bags of navy officers until they do so. No army or navy officer ought ever be in position to humilate workingmen, and they seem to regard them as they regard the enlisted men under them—no better than dogs.

Navy-yard machinists, get together or stop whining.

A Blessing in Disguise.

With all due compassion for those who now suffer the inconvenience occasioned by a meager coal supply, we yet are constrained to accept the present object-lesson as a blessing in disguise.

Had the coal strike ended without the prospect of concession to at least some of the demands by the miners the public in general would never have asked for a bill of particulars to enlighten them as to the several points in dispute. The struggle which lasted for months would have carried with it no great moral lesson, and in the years to come a recital of the wrongs complained of would have been listened to with less interest than is usually accorded to a pleasing fairy tale.

It should be remembered that at the beginning of all this trouble several ineffectual attempts were made by the miners to avoid the strike, including an offer to submit their grievances to a board of arbitrators. With each overture the operators declared there was nothing to arbitrate. The United Mine Workers of America, of which the cool and intrepid MITCHELL is President, insisted that there were many things to arbitrate, and in full sympathy with this contention stood the American Federation of Labor, at the head of which was the conservative, able, and stout hearted GOMPERS, who declared that the miners' fight must be won even if by the sacrifice it took every dollar in the treasury of the A. F. of L. Troops were called for by the operators, for the operators, and so the battle opened.

Week after week went by and the miner with his family endured much that was little known to the general public, while from the operators naught was heard save the incessant cry for "more troops," the presence and manouvering of which it was fondly expected would revive the horrible memories of Hazleton, bring terror to the hearts of the miners, and the battle of might would be won. Unawed, and strengthened in each resolve by memories of former defeats, the miner yet stood firm, and to him came victory at last when an aroused public sentiment would no longer withstand the threatening results of a struggle which might be prolonged to the winter months.

The investigation by the Strike Commission has already progressed far enough to clearly demonstrate the justice of the miners' claims, and the community at large have in these later experiences enough to convince them that, as a plain business proposition and a proper regard for public welfare, it would have been better for the operators had they dealt fairly with their men and so have avoided what has ripened into a real "scene," the end of which is not yet.

Leave of Absence Case Argued.

The argument of the question of leaves of absence to temporary employes of the Government Printing Office took place before the Supreme Court, Monday, January 5. Mr. George A. King represented the claimant in the test case and Hon. Louis A. Pradt, the Assistant Attorney General, the side of the Government. The arguments were along the same lines as indicated in our last article on this subject. Much interest was taken by the Court, who frequently interrupted with questions. A decision may be expected before many weeks. Should it be favorable, it is likely that all claims which get filed up to the date of the decision will be referred by the Court of Claims to an auditor, before whom the amount of the claims will be proved up and then the judgments entered in favor of the individuals entitled for the proper amounts.

It is understood that some persons are purchasing these claims at a discount. It may be well for them to bear in mind the provisions to section 3477, of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

"All transfers and assignments made of any claim upon the United States, or any part or share thereof, or interest therein, whether absolute or conditional, and whatever may be the consideration therefor, and all powers of attorney, orders, or other authorities for receiving payment of any such claim, or any part or share thereof, shall be absolutely null and void; unless they are freely made and executed in the presence of at least two attesting witnesses, after the allowance of such a claim, the ascertainment of the amount due, and the issuing of a warrant for the payment thereof."

According to this law such purchases are void and therefore hardly constitute a very safe investment.

Second Division.

Will E. Soult is on the proof press.

H. C. Shearer is again on the sick list.

Charles E. Davis has developed into a first-class "black" man.

Joe Leonard is still on the sick list. Here's hoping he will soon be well.

W. V. Parshall is acting bankman and has shown himself to be thoroughly competent.

Ed Hall has returned to work after being absent several days on account of sickness.

Edward G. Nalle was absent a few days last week on account of the death of his sister.

John Delahunty, has developed into a "trusty" here of late. John is competent to fill any old position.

There have been quite a number of transfers to this room recently. We have a "full house" at present.

The question now is, "Are you up with your average, man?" and not, "Are you up to the average man?"

Since the introduction of the new 55¾ minute time slip, E. C. Saltzman is working overtime to keep up. He has our sym.

"Sis" Hopkins has tired of being a "Cascaret" and has returned to day work. He has been assigned to this division.

The following have been transferred from the "Spess" to this room: D. A. Smith, Joseph I. Keefer, and William M. Wood.

In the light of the investigation now going on there seems to be a "nigger" in the "coal pile. Can it be possible that he is a Baer?

Now that the holidays are over and that "swelling" in the head has receded, as it were, we will get down to business once more.

M. G. Sherman was called home last week on account of sickness in his family, but is back at his post again and reports all well at home.

The many friends of "Old Hutch," slug 39 of this division, who lives at 609 I street N. W., will be sorry to hear that he is still dangerously ill with pleurisy. He has our best wishes for his speedy recovery.

Any one desiring to join the Columbia Relief Association should see Thomas A. Fitzgerald. Every regular employe of the office should join one of these relief associations and make himself more independent in case of sickness.

Shakespeare was evidently pretty well acquainted with human nature when he made the remark about "Man, proud man, dressed in a little brief authority, etc., makes proud angels weep." Gentle reader, you know the rest.

The genial writer who contributes some brilliant remarks to this paper under the nom de plume of "Cycle" tells his readers "not to buy papers, but to borrow their neighbor's," etc. We notice that quite a number of members of this chapel are following his suggestion in that respect.

The gentlemen who were responsible for placing the Typographical Journal in the hands of all our members free of charge deserve unstinted praise, as by so doing it is made possible for all members of our organization throughout the country to know what is going on in our ranks. There are quite a number of interesting articles in the January number, especially the one about our Home at Colorado Springs, and also the one on the Immigration Problem, both of which should be read by all our members.

The would-be sports of this division bowled another series Saturday night with the following result: First game—Parshall, 124; Richards, 129; Sherman, 95; Hallock, 123; Wolfe, 69; total, 540 Branham, 98; Nobles, 73; Saltzman, 112; Moler, 112; Bright, 43; total, 438 Second game—Parshall, 137; Richards, 142; Sherman, 75; Hallock, 80; Wolfe, 67; total, 501. Branham, 102; Nobles, 80; Saltzman, 121; Moler, 98; Bright, 50; total, 451. Third game—Parshall, 109; Richards, 130; Sherman, 98; Hallock, 90; Wolfe, 83; total, 510. Branham, 94; Nobles, 98; Saltzman, 96; Moler, 106; Bright, 52; total, 446. This was Mr. Bright's first attempt at bowling. Parshall's team won all three games. Branham was in rare form. Wolfe showed considerable improvement and it is believed that with about two years' practice he will finally "get on to the game," as it were.

We are sorry to learn that the so-called "bookworms" of the Proof Room are somewhat baffled by our quotation, as by this admission they show a lack of knowledge of Holy Writ. But what some people don't know about the only Book would fill a good sized volume. It occurs to us that several members of that august body—the Proof Room—were given a few days "off" because forsooth they overlooked an error or two of a biblical nature in one of Senator Hoar's speeches some years ago. Am I not right? In quoting from "Bobby" Burns we said millions mourn and not thousands. It would seem to the casual observer that the "bookworm's" physical as well as mental vision is somewhat impaired, if he can not tell "thousands" from "millions" when it is "reprint." We would suggest a change of glasses for our erstwhile critic. Let us hope he does not read proof in that manner.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

Union meeting Sunday.

Titus F. Ellis, who has been confined to his room the past week, is now improving.

John Hooper, of Charlotte, N. C., is now a regular civil service situation cinch in the G. P. O.

Ed. S. Briedenstein, of the Times, has returned from a pleasant visit to his home at Cleveland, Ohio.

The "nerve" of typos oft remind 'em
They could circumvent much hash and sprint,
Were it not that Bloomer's sure to find 'em
And proclaim their whereabouts in print.
—M. C. Kipe.

"Billy" Mattock, of Albuquerque, Bernalillo county, N. Mex., has been transferred from the Spess to the First Division, G. P. O.

Public Printer John S. Leech, of Manila, Philippine Islands, U. S. A., is on leave of absence touring Japan, and Edwin C. Jones is acting public printer during his absence.

Tommy Neal has the sincere sympathy of his friends in the loss of his mother, Mrs. E. B. Chesterman, who died at Richmond, Va., Friday last, January 9, aged fifty six years.

J. T. ("Jack") Roberts, of Emporia, Kans., and Miss Emma A. Tyler, of Williamsport, Pa., were quietly married Thursday evening, January 15, at the residence of the groom's brother, Mr. J. D. Roberts, foreman of the First Division. "Jack" is an employe of the State branch, G. P. O.

The Amos J. Cummings' Memorial Committee, authorized by the I. T. U. Convention at Cincinnati, consisting of James M. Lynch, President of the International Typographical Union; M. G. Scott, President of New York Union, No. 6; Alfred D. Calvert, President of Philadelphia Union, No. 2; Joe M. Johnson, President of Columbia Union, No. 101; A. G. Davis, Secretary of Boston Union, No. 13, and "Cy" Brown, of Syracuse (N. Y.) Union, No. 55, are in session in this city.

Call at 211 H street northwest and look at the nice, comfortable rooms; charges moderate.

Third Division.

William McEnaney was elected chairman of this chapel and Hindman Doxey was chosen secretary at the regular quarterly election held last week.

The new relief association lately organized in this division has a membership of about 50. The books will be left open until next Monday for charter members.

Messrs. Charles L. Nace, Arthur L. Fessenden, and J. L. Kause, who were lately assigned to this division as temporaries, have been given probationary appointments.

John P. Devlin, recently transferred to this room from the Treasury Branch, has resigned, and will devote all of his time to the practice of dentistry. We are glad to record another wise one.

No, gentle reader, our division does not border on a hay-field, although that whistle that emanates from the Fourth Division "morgue" is intended to call up a "horse"—of the two-legged variety.

Titus Ellis was installed as sergeant at-arms of G. P. O. Council, N. U., last week, and he is now suffering with rheumatism in his right shoulder. The duties of that officer in this organization must be very strenuous.

"Lots of men would never have reached the top of the ladder if their wives had not steadied it." And lots of men would probably have reached the top if their wives had not shook it. It is well to keep in mind the contrary of such quotations, in order to give excuse to those who fail.

The scientists have discovered a new disease germ, with a name that would certainly prove a test to your energies to pronounce, which they claim produces laziness, and assert that it is mainly prevalent in Washington. The latter charge may be so. It may be sufficient to say that this germ was not discovered by a Washington scientist.

A correspondent in last week's issue of THE TRADES UNIONIST announced the fact that he had received a pamphlet giving a description of some old regiment in Kansas. This may be interesting reading to some of your subscribers—it was to the writer—but we believe he misconceived the purpose for which it was sent. We suggest it was sent as a "work of art," and any comment along that line in a trades paper of the nature of THE TRADES UNIONIST would have been entirely proper.

The Washington Public Library, the gift of Andrew Carnegie to the Nation's Capital, was dedicated last week. The ceremonies were attended by the President and other high dignitaries of the nation and city, and was a brilliant affair. A writer for THE TRADES UNIONIST, some time ago, asserted that it would be dedicated by a "set of howling swells." That may be his peculiar way of chronicling events, but we suspect that an analytical examination of his interior would disclose a quantity of blue bile on his liver.

Carnegie, who has already donated a $350,000 library to the city, which was dedicated last week, has made an offer of a like sum to the city for establishing branch libraries. He has taken this method of making use of his vast income and is establishing libraries all over the country, believing this to be the broadest and best field for his charities. There are those who believe he could make better use of his money by contributing to the more immediate wants of the poorer class of people, but this is the narrow view of the indolent and shiftless element, and would only result in increasing the ranks of this class of people. To help others to help themselves is the nobler charity, and this is what Mr. Carnegie believes he is doing when he is giving to the different communities these free libraries. It may not directly benefit those that thus criticise him, nor the writer. We're not the only people, or the only kind of people, in this world. There are those who are gifted with energy and direction, who can and do benefit by the advantages of these free public libraries. IMJAY.

You can be accommodated with a nice, home-like room at 211 H street northwest; charges reasonable.

Proof-room Pencil Points.

George T. Jeffrey, who has been absent from the office for over two months, and who, as a victim of typhoid fever, laid for a time at death's door, is slowly convalescing.

Prof. J. A. D. Turner employs many spare moments in the cultivation of his musical talent. A sweet-toned violin, of foreign make and ancient date, is the much-prized instrument with which he produces sounds that charm the esthetic ear.

The chilly blasts that make Montgomery's fields and forest bare, and not being favorable to the cultivation of yarns, Boston beans, and big sunflowers, Tiller of the Soil Emmet B Chambers, whose services once Public Printer Benedict declined because he "wanted printers, not farmers," has turned away from Kensington and is wintering in the city, where he is regaled by the rich viands furnished by the Hotel d'Haines on H street northwest.

A careful calculation has developed the fact that the genial Charles O'Neill (Milesian traveler) covers, yearly, 2 650 miles in his daily journeys from the Proof-room to one of his sleeping apartments, located in the farthest confines of a neighboring Maryland city. Though cat-naps are easy to Charlie at any time or place, he can only be lulled to solid slumbers by the "car rattling over the stony street" and by the gentle murmurs of flowing bilge water.

Removal from place to place necessarily falls to the lot of many employes of the Proof Room of this great printing institution. Among changes of recent date it is noted that E. G. Farrell, formerly first reader, now occupies the desk of a copy preparer. W. G. Fearing (holder) has been temporarily filling the place of Peter Rust (collector and custodian of copy), who was on the sick list. Willis E. Young (reader) a son of the late chief, William Young, has been transferred to the Night Proof, and his place has been filled by the appointment of a Fourth Division compositor, Edwin Davidson, who hails from the Old Bay State. Copy Editor A. P. Marston has been removed to the office of Capt. H. T. Brian and promoted to the rank of assistant foreman.

POSTOFFICE CLERKS WITHDRAW

The Carnegie Motion Defeated—The Paper Boxmakers' Union and Rochester Lodge, I. A. M. Communicate—Credentials Many—The Bottlers' Union Matter—The Milk Wagon Drivers—Other Matters.

President Hamerstrom called the weekly session of the Central Labor Union to order Monday night, at Typographical Temple.

Previous meeting's minutes were read and approved.

Credentials were received from Mail Bag Workers' Union, No. 10504, certifying Mrs. Mann, Mrs. Otto, Mrs. McCoving, Mrs. Whiteford, and Miss Cross; from Ice Wagon Drivers, No. 430, certifying Messrs. W. Chism, W. Parnell, George Murray, William Klug, and Benj. F. De Atley; from Upholsterers, No. 58, certifying Messrs. Geo. Ackman, Ernest Paxton, Harry M. Bedell, Henry Nolda, and John N. Volz; from Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers, No. 102, certifying Messrs. Joseph A. Daly, D. C. Childress, William J. Hunt, J. H. Steffy, and Charles J. Nairn; from Negative Cutters' Union, No. 8176, certifying Messrs. John S. Robertson, Fred W. Plugge, and Clarence W. Schroeder; from Washington Lodge, No. 193, I. A. M., certifying W. A. Searle; from Electrical Workers, No. 26, certifying Messrs. Edw. Nothnagel, H. W. Sherman, S F. Adams, George Neal, and S. C. Pratt; from Bookbinders, No. 4, certifying J. J. Conroy, Robert Frailey, E. S. Fry, E. J. Roche, and W. C. Parry.

Washington Postoffice Clerks' Union, No. 9834, communicated that while their union was in sympathy with the objects for which the Central Labor Union stands, the conditions existing at the present time necessitated that their union withdraw from this body. Referred to the American Federation of Labor.

The request of John N. Bogart, the A. F. of L. organizer in New York city, asking for a list of addresses of all secretaries of local unions in this city and vicinity, was complied with.

The communication of Paper Boxmakers' Union, No. 10249, setting forth the details of their strike, was referred to the Label Committee.

Rochester City Lodge, No. 93, I. A. of M., communicated relative to their strike still being on against the firm of Hohlmann & Maurer (Taylor Bros.), thermometer manufacturers, and requested this body to use its influence to discontinue the sale of their products in this city in case they were handled here. Referred to Label Committee.

Under the call of unions, the secretary called attention to the Bottlers' Union, whose delegates had not been present for several months. Referred to the American Federation of Labor.

Barbers' Union, No. 239, stated that their difficulty with Mr. George Brown had been adjusted, through the assistance of the Grievance Committee.

Columbia Lodge of Machinists called the attention of the body to the unfair firm of Brown & Sharpe, and stated that all the products of that firm were unfair.

Delegate Trittipoe, of the Milk Wagon Drivers, stated that he had been arrested, charged with distributing circulars on the streets of Washington. On motion a committee consisting of Delegates Robinson, Spohn, and Pfau was appointed to investigate the matter.

The secretary was directed to file charges with Major Sylvester against Lieutenant Jordan for false imprisonment of Delegate Trittipoe.

Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, presented a letter that had been received by Secretary Garrett and requested that this body take action on the same. The Secretary was directed to notify Columbia Typographical Union that the matter was now in the hands of the Legislative Committee of this body.

The following resolution, upon request of Delegate Dickman, was indorsed:

S. R. 132. JOINT RESOLUTION.

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting the District of Columbia.

Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), that the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be proposed for ratification by the legislatures of the several States, which, when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"The District of Columbia shall be considered a State in so far as shall entitle it to representation in the Congress of the United States and in the Electoral College, and in said District of Columbia Senators and electors shall be chosen by direct vote of the people."

A motion was made to appoint a committee of three to confer with the trustees of the Carnegie Institute relative to a course of lectures on political economy. The motion was defeated.

Columbia Union's Yearbook.

To Advertising Patrons and Membership:

The Yearbook of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, is being distributed this week to the advertising patrons and the members of Columbia Union. Besides, the book will be mailed to all parts of the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union and to other crafts. The edition of 5,000 copies, just from the press of THE TRADES UNIONIST, will be given circulation as rapidly as possible, and it is the desire of the Printing Committee to complete the distribution this week.

Every member of Columbia Union is entitled to one copy of the Yearbook, gratis. Should extra copies be desired by members they can be secured by giving their names, and the number of copies desired, to chairman of chapel, members of the Printing Committee, and the secretary's office; 10 cents each will be charged for extra copies. These will be supplied immediately after the delivery is completed of the copies furnished free to the membership, which numbers 2,000.

Requests having been made to purchase the individual cuts used in the Yearbook, the Printing Committee has been directed by the union to sell to the officers and members of committees these half tones at one half the original cost. Application may be made to the committee and to Secretary Garrett, at Temple; T. A. Bynum, Day Proof Room; Milo Shanks, Third Division; E. J. Hall, Second Division, Government Printing Office.

Fraternally,

PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Bindery Notes.

Patsy Finnegan's dream: A 12-foot bench and a job eulogies.

Johnny Burns received another present this week. Ask him about it.

Bob McLanahan returned to work Tuesday, after a protracted spell of sickness.

The two Johns, or the soap fat twins, can be found daily doing an agricultural stunt in alley 9.

Men who pose as wise men on the bindery floor should not be led astray by the vaporings of their nonsensical friends.

Cap. White contemplates again entering the married state and, as a preliminary thereto, has purchased an oil stove and a doll baby.

There is considerable speculation as to who has the undivided affections of the pie woman. The curly-haired boy seems to have the inside track.

Miss Fanny Levy, of the Union Building Bindery, visited the main office this week, and was given a great ovation by her numerous friends who were pleased to see her.

George Wright will be more careful in the future in regard to his oil stove. The other night the oil burned out and the soot settled upon the faces of George and his better half, and from George's account of it their faces must have resembled Corby's.

The sewing room of the bindery is harboring another genius whose nom de plume is Earl Courtney. He has written the story of his life and printed it himself. It is fearfully and wonderfully made. When the wagon backs up here the Earl will be one of the first to take a ride in it.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Per request therefor, I append the "chorus girl's toast," given at the Momus Club banquet:

There's many a man who is good for a treat
And ever is eager to drink or to eat,
Who'll come on the run when you're smiling and gay
And so long as you're smiling is ready to play.

But here's to the man who will wipe off your tears,
Who'll hand you a check when your rent's in arrears,
Who loves you no less 'cause there's trouble about,
And lifts to your feet when you're clear down and out.

Mid winter as well as balmy springtime Washington maintains its reputation as the convention city, as witness assembling here the past month no less than eleven national conventions, while January and February will have a goodly share.

The Post-office Department is prepared to issue a 13-cent postage stamp. The color is dark slate and bears a portrait of the late President Harrison, with the name "Harrison," and the years of birth and death on either side of the name. The stamp is to serve for registry fee on foreign letters, and for other matter requiring 13 cents or more postage.

By the purchase of the Virginia Hotel property, at the Grand Circle, the New York American and Journal has obtained a conspicuous uptown site of its own. This is the second instance in which a newspaper has followed the lead set by the Herald in moving to one of the city's prominent uptown traffic centres. The New York Times recently secured the Pabst Building site, at Forty-second street, Seventh avenue and Broadway.

The structure to be erected on the site will be twenty stories high. The hotel occupies the small block bounded the by Grand Circle, Broadway, Fifty-eighth street and Eighth avenue.

THE MILK WAGON DRIVERS.

A Just and Reasonable Labor Reform Victory Won at Last

Chicago Tribune.

The Chicago Milk Wagon Drivers' Union, which was only organized last September, is to be congratulated upon its first victory. Hereafter the drivers will make bat one delivery all the year round and until April next they will begin to cover their route at 8 a. m., Sundays and holidays excepted, instead of before daylight, as they have done hitherto. The concession which they have obtained from the employers is both reasonable and humane.

The milk wagon driver's work is not hard work, but it has been wearisome. It began at 3 o'clock in the morning and did not close until 6:30 in the evening, fifteen hours and a half of work in all sorts of weather, with little or no time for recreation or social enjoyment. A man who has to be at the barns at 3 in the morning must spend the most of the time off duty in sleep in order to be ready for his work. Now the driver will begin his work about the time other workingmen do, and doubtless he will give customers better service for the change.

Housekeepers may find the new system of delivery a little inconvenient at first, but they can easily adjust the domestic routine to suit it, and in the end they will find many advantages growing out of it. They will be likely to get better milk, and not left-over milk because of late trains. They will be surer of their day's supply when the early-going tramp no longer finds the bottle of milk awaiting him on the doorstep. Not only will people living near milk barns have more quiet at daybreak or before that time, but persons all over the city will cease to be roused from slumber before it is light by the milk wagons rattling over the pavements. If there were no other consideration this alone should commend the new schedule to public favor. It will be a gain all around. The consumer will get fresher milk, be more sure to have it, and will have his temper undisturbed and his beauty sleep unbroken. The driver will find time to see his friends go to the theater occasionally, and attend to his educational and spiritual needs, as a good milk driver should.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

In a conversation I recently had with Mr. F. M. Detweiler, sr., he told me that he helped remove the printing material to the present Government Printing Office, when it was first established, in 1856. "Then, as now, it was called Swampoodle," he said, "and it then deserved it. The building stood alone out there, and there was little but paths leading to it. One morning a couple of girls who had just obtained employment were trying to find it, and they saw a man going in the same direction, so they asked him if he knew the way.

"'Oh, yes,' said he, 'I work there. I'll show you where it is.'

"They all went along together, and after a while they came to the railroad tracks, and then they knew they had missed it. It was a very foggy morning and they could easily pass very near to it without seeing it. They turned back and found the office, but his fellow-workmen teased the girls' would-be guide for trying to mislead and steal them.

"There was a belfry or cupola on the building," said Mr. Detweiler, "and the authorities talked of putting a bell in it to ring the working hours, but the men said they'd be d——d if they'd go to work by a bell. When the whistle blew, they would work five minutes longer to show that they were not governed by the whistle."

This coincides with what Captain Brian once told me when I asked him why the ridiculous lunch hour we then had, from 1 to 2 o'clock, and which Mr. Benedict changed, had been selected.

"The men," he said, "did not want to be considered as having anything in common with ordinary workingmen. They wouldn't go to work or quit by the whistle—didn't need a whistle to tell them when to go to work, they said—and they wouldn't eat their noonday meal at the same time with common, ordinary mechanics. So the dinner hour was fixed from 1 to 2."

This almost carries a fellow back to the time when printers wore swords, of which a New Jersey editor reminded "Texas" Smith once when the latter attempted a gentle panhandle.

Mr. Detweiler pointed out a house nearly across the street from the present great establishment of Judd & Detweiler which was then a printers' boarding house, and spoke of another around on E street. While other mechanics boarded at these houses, the printers would have nothing to do with them and would not take their meals at the same hours. They were a swell crowd, taken all in all, in those days. How have the mighty fallen!

Speaking of printers' boarding houses I saw in the Typographical Journal recently where old "Mother" Courtney, of Buffalo, who run a printers' boarding house there longer than the oldest of us can recollect, had recently died, away up in the eighties. She had two printer sons, Tom and Jim Courtney, and a printer son in-law, Jim Lindsay. I never boarded there; "Daddy" O'Toole's was good enough for me and nearer.

Last Thursday President James M. Lynch, accompanied by Secretary A. G. Davis, of Boston, F. H. Brown, of Syracuse; and Presidents M. G. Scott, of New York, and A. D. Calvert, of Philadelphia, paid our city a visit, in connection with the Amos Cummings memorial, and an oyster roast was got up for them at Sam Solomon's "down on Island," as old Washingtonians still say. There were roasted oysters, steamed oysters, raw oysters, raw beer, and cigars, and the guests and all present enjoyed themselves. There was no speech making, but President Lynch said that if that was a sample of what the convention can expect next summer he thought there would be about 30,000 visitors here. Mr. Davis said he never was a victim before of so thoroughly enjoyable a "roast." Those of our local talent participating were President Joe M. Johnson, E. F. Geyer, A. M. Butler, E. E. Calhoon, E. W. Patton, D. W. Fleming, J. B. Dickman, W. S. Schinnerer, F. N. Whitehead, Mark Barnum, H. S. Sauter, T. C. Parsons, Dexter S. Hussey (recently returned to town), J. G. Stelle, T. A. Bynum, C. T. Graff, R. A. Julian, W. H. Bailey, E. A. M. Lawson, and me. The affair broke up at about 11 o'clock.

I had quite a chat with Arthur G. Davis, secretary of Boston Union, about old friends there, among others Sam West, who philandered around this city awhile about twenty years ago, on his way from Richmond toward a higher civilization. Mr. Davis mentioned the case of a lady proofreader there, who sent him a note positively and emphatically refusing to pay the Typographical Journal assessment.

"I sent the chairman of the office in which she is employed a direction to collect all dues and assessments against her or stop her from work," said Mr. D., "and then took the first train out of town."

On Friday our visitors left the city.

TOMMY BASH WAS TENDER TO THE "TOUCH."

[Dedicated to all of them—"too numerous to mention."]

A thrifty boy was Tommy Bash,
Who clung to all he got;
His god was Gold, his prophet Cash.
And Charity knew not.

Now, Tommy never gave a thing away;
He wouldn't help a cripple buy a crutch;
Whate'er was in his purse was there to stay,
For Tommy Bash was tender to the "touch."

He'd see a paper come around
For suff'ring man's relief,
And never indicate by sound
His sympathy with grief.

Now, Tommy said he'd troubles of his own
'Thout worrying o'er hard-luck guys and such,
And then assume a lofty, moral tone—
'Deed Tommy Bash was tender to the "touch."

And Tommy's just as sore on dues;
The union's claims are theft;
'F he could he surely would refuse—
The chairman would be left.

But Tommy cannot stand the chairman off;
To do so sure would please him very much;
He'll whine and wheeze and sneeze and growl and cough,
For Tommy Bash is tender to the "touch."

Now, there must surely be a place,
Where even such small souls
Will not be lost, without a trace
Of them on Mem'ry's rolls;
Where Inf'nite Power, with microscope,
Will keep them e'er in sight,
Not out of pity, nor with hope,
But to show Inf'nite might.

Then Tommy Bash, whose soul in mustard seed
Of room as frog in ocean'd find as much,
Will realize what he has lost by greed—
This Tommy who was tender to the "touch."

John Berg recently told me of a trip he made to Denver (he has been there more than once) about 1879. Being in the company of a cigarmaker at Omaha, they got to discussing the chances of getting through to Denver by "jumping trains," of which the cigarmaker was very skeptical, and to settle the matter they immediately boarded a train to test it. Berg lost the cigarmaker at Kearney and beat him to Denver three days, through the refusal of the latter to again board a train from which they had been put off. Berg says the first man he met in Denver was old Peter B. Lee, "famed in song and story" and then known in every printing office in the West. After greeting him Lee said:

"You want to go to work, I know. Go to work for me!"

"But I've just got off the train and I'm dirty, hungry, and sleepy," said Berg.

"I can't help that," said Peter B. "I've worked two straight weeks and I've got to have a sub. Here's two dollars. Go and get a shirt, a shave, and a suack, and then come up and go to work."

Berg did so, and as old Peter never showed up again, he worked three straight weeks and pulled in a couple of hundred at faro, when he saw a scalper's sign:

"First-class ticket and sleeper to Kansas City, $18.

That caught him, as the regular fare there was thirty-odd, and he went and hunted up a newly arrived tourist, gave him his rule, bought the scalp ticket, and went to Kansas City.

Smythe (R. B.) & Shannon (B. J.), who have been conducting the Harrisonburg (Va.) Morning News that the former established six or seven years ago, in which the latter joined him about a year ago, have purchased the Staunton Daily News and will conduct both papers. William A. Barr, who has been in charge of the rural free delivery of Virginia, has joined the firm, now known as the News Publishing Company. The new arrangement will enable both papers to be published more economically and therefore give the people of both cities better papers. Type-setting machines and other improvements will be added, and everything necessary to enable them to furnish each city with a good newspaper. Mr. Smythe and Mr. Shannon are too well known here to need any description, and their success ought to be an incentive to our young fellows who are tired of working for wages.

* * * *

A letter from Charles W. Hill, of the Baker City (Oreg.) Herald, formerly a reader here, states that he is the purchasing agent of the White Swan Mines Company, in addition to publishing the Herald. There is a jump into affluence from an ordinary living, without any preliminary climbing. Oh, we can do it when we try.

* * * *

The initial number of the new Typographical Journal is all that its most ardent advocates could wish it to be—replete with well-written articles on subjects pertaining to the craft and correspondence from all sections of the country. Its universal circulation among union men can not fail to be of the greatest benefit, for we have too many members who do not realize what unionism is to them. Too many of them have never known what it is to contend for every privilege and benefit. Too few realize that every advantage we have, in the way of wages, leave, and holidays, is the direct work of the union. They know that Congress gave us these things, but they fail to realize that Congress was induced to do so by our union, aided by our brethren throughout the country. It will be an education in unionism to many who accept the blessings brought to them by the union with no other expression regarding it than complaint at the amount of the dues. It will set many to thinking whose thoughts never ranged higher in union matters than contempt and hatred toward the arbitrary "walking delegate" who makes vast numbers of unwilling men to strike! If it does all this, it will be worth many times the paltry five cents we pay for it.

* * * *

George Wilson told me the other day that Henry J. Middleton, the rat foreman of the Savannah (Ga.) News, is dead. When I worked in Savannah, thirty years ago, Middleton was the foreman of the Advertiser, on which I worked, and was a very fair, decent man, easy to get along with, though, as I remember, he was sick a good deal of the time, and then John F. Britton subbed for him. He was a small, under-sized man, given to calling for order by tapping with his pencil while reading proof. When the Advertiser "busted," Middleton went to the News, and when Jeff Taylor (another old rat) died, he succeeded to the foremanship. Savannah was a good union town during my experience there—in fact, I believe there was not a rat or a place for a rat there. Wages were 50 cents a thousand and all the papers were fat. (I will never stand for the bastard word "phat.")

* * * *

Let me suggest to "S. M. S.," of the Second, that he who attempts quotations from memory generally makes very sloppy work of it, whether its Shakespeare, Burns, or the Bible.

* * * *

Also, to "Imjay" and all the other jays that it is very cheap business to assume this "high moral" when he wants to criticise. It's too much like "telling mamma" to be enjoyed by men, especially as he hides in fence corners while he makes faces. Verbum saphead.

* * * *

Tom Galvin, slug 30 on the Record, has added a side line—that is, he has taken the agency for the Beech-Nut Packing Company's products. This noted company's factory is at Canajoharie, N. Y., and "Beech-Nut hams and bacon, sliced bacon and beef in glass" is their graft. They supply all the great hotels with these goods, and I readily recognized in the jar Galvin gave me the same flavor I used to get at the Waldorf-Astoria. They are truly fine goods and not perceptibly more expensive than those bought at the grocery store. Galvin will take your order for a sample or a whole warehouse full.

Columbia Union's Yearbook.

The proprietors of THE TRADES UNIONIST have been the recipients of so many compliments upon the typography and presswork of Columbia Union's Fourth Yearbook, just issued from our press, that we deem it but proper to share the honors with those whose artistic skill have contributed so much to the satisfactory result.

The advertisements were designed and set by Mr. A. P. HERON, a young Washington printer, and his work speaks for itself. That he is an all-round job printer of more than ordinary ability an inspection of his productions will demonstrate.

The presswork was done by Mr. F. R. JOHNSON on a Cottrell Triumph drum-cylinder, two roller press, at times under adverse conditions, due to being done in extremely cold weather in a building better calculated for summer use. It is all that could have been asked had circumstances been most favorable. Close inspection of the presswork demonstrates that the artisan is fully capable of handling any job in his line and that he has few equals, if any, in his calling.

The binding was done at the book bindery of E. F. PRICE & Co., 1108 E street northwest, and is fully up to the standard of the typography and presswork.

The paper is from the well-known wholesale paper and stationery dealers, R. P. ANDREWS & Co., 627 629 Louisiana avenue northwest, from whose house comes the paper on which THE TRADES UNIONIST is printed.

The ink is from the JAENECKE PRINTING INK COMPANY—works at Newark, N. J.; Hanover, Germany, and Moscow, Russia; main office, Newark, with branches in New York, Chicago, and London.

With the most skilled workmen and the best materials in the market, THE TRADES UNIONIST feels that it deserves the complimentary expressions that have been showered upon it on the production of this, the most pretentious work that has so for been issued from its press, and the proprietors have nothing but praise and thanks for those who have been of such signal assistance—first of all, Mr. THOMAS ALLEN BYNUM, chairman of the Committee on Printing, and all who have lent their aid.

BY deed of conveyance the Bennings race course last week passed to the possession of the Washington Jockey Club. Consideration, $200,000.

ABRAM S. HEWITT, ex-member of Congress and once Mayor of New York City, died on Sunday last. Mr. HEWITT was a son-in-law of the lamented PETER COOPER, philanthropist and founder of Cooper Institute.

THE statistics show that between thirty and forty white women of Boston marry negroes each year, and that the average of white men who choose colored wives is about one a year. More might be said, but we don't care to mix.

JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER, of Standard Oil fame, wants a new stomach, and has offered to give up one of his many millions if the physician will furnish the digester. So when oil goes up a cent or two on a gallon the public may take it for granted that JOHN has found his man.

N. G. GONZALES, an editor of Columbia, S. C., died on Monday of this week from pistol shot wound inflicted by Lieutenant-Governor TILLMAN. The provocation came from newspaper articles derogatory to the character of TILLMAN, who is now in jail and must answer the charge of murder. And this is called "chivalry."

THE National Board of Health has summoned representative physicians from several States and measures are being formulated to set to work a plan to stamp out the bubonic plague, which has gained considerable headway in this country. Chinatown, San Francisco, is regarded as one of the dark spots. If drastic treatment is required, we advise that Dr. DENIS KEARNY be called in. Plague take this whole assimilation business, anyhow.

MESSRS. PLATT, of New York, and FAIRBANKS, of Indiana, were each elected to succeed themselves as United States Senators by their respective Legislatures on Monday, and on the same day ALBERT J. HOPKINS was chosen by the Illinois Legislature to succeed WILLIAM E. MASON. The deadlock remains unbroken in Delaware, and Colorado, too, is furnishing evidence from day to day of the desirability of a change from caucus and filibustering methods to direct vote of the people.

MT. VERNON SQUARE was selected as the site for the new CARNEGIE library building because as a public park it had come to be merely a loafing place where the drowsy, dusky citizen had almost absolute possession. Other people used the paths leading through the park as a short cut in reaching a point of destination, but seldom found room, if so inclined, for a moment's rest. As an old camping ground the colored residents will naturally rally 'round and enter into their new quarters and adopt them as their own, and why not?

JUBILEE services were held in the Lafayette Theater in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, attended by upward of three thousand men. Mr. F. B. SMITH, who was one of the principal speakers, addressing himself to the subject as to what constitutes a strong man, made use of the following language: "Money-making power is not the test of a man's strength, even in this age of dollars. The ability to make money honorably and to use it for the benefit of mankind is not to be despised. It is the duty of every man to make money. It is his duty to spend less than he makes and to be liberal in his gifts, to work for the uplifting and betterment of his fellow-man. But great ability to make money is not an indication of great strength. Two of the weakest men I ever knew were worth millions, which they accumulated by means of the labor of hundreds of employes. When asked to make a small gift for the uplifting of their employes, they declared that they didn't care if the men who worked for them did go to hell, and boasted that they were getting their employes to work very cheaply, and would lower their wages if it were possible. Nobody could say that such men as those were typical of strength."

AFTER-DINNER DILATIONS.

To avoid "outs" set the "take" in full, as per copy.

I notice that my good friend, William Tipton Talbott, by common consent the poet laureate of local printerdom, has the honor of space fenced off for occasional gems in the Washington Sunday Post, which is always the favorite paper, but especially so with each favor from Talbott.

Up at the "Spess" a proof with a considerable "out" is jocosely rated as a "dear-sir," while one without errors is dubbed an "O. K.," and is so announced by the galley messenger. The intricacies of specifications with word repetitions, together with exactness of style, all contribute to make the job a vexatious one, and yet a majority of the force would rather work there than anywhere else. So I am told.

By favor of an advance copy of the Yearbook for 1902, I am fully prepared to pronounce it good from beginning to end, and was sorry when the end came. The committee in charge deserve, and doubtless will receive, the thanks of Columbia Union for a work so creditable in its choice and treatment of the many subjects. The typography and embellishments are testimonials in themselves and a credit to the skill of a well-equipped and thoroughly union office.

All this talk about Mormon Smoot, of Utah, who is apparently headed for a seat in the U. S. Senate, calls to mind some boyhood recollections. "Uncle" Joel Stone, as he was familiarly known to everyone in the neighborhood, when questioned would invariably give the size of his family as "one wife and eleven children," carefully emphasizing the one in each instance. Uncle Joel was scrupulously honest in all things and was never known to take anything that did not belong to him. The newspaper reports do not agree that Mr. Smoot is that kind of a man.

What has become of the debating society which started out under such favorable auspices, with meeting place at the Temple some two or three years ago, and which included in its list of membership an array of talent calculated to insure a long lease of life and a career of much usefulness? It is recorded that Franklin, in his career as printer, formed a club in Philadelphia called "The Junta," which held weekly meetings for the discussion of questions of morality, philosophy and politics, which continued over forty years and from which sprang the American Philosophical Society. From the same source is traced the first subscription library in America. There is no reason why Columbia Union should not have a good, strong debating society.

Some time since there was talk of enlarging the Temple by adding on a story or two, and perhaps it was in the plan to remodel the interior of the building as it now stands. It would not be a bad idea to set apart space for a library or reading room where members and their friends might meet of an evening or pass a leisure hour in a purely social way, or discuss briefly the live issues of the day. It would also be a graceful act to provide a memorial hall and place upon the walls the life-size portraits of patron saints and those who from time to time have attested their interest by timely and conspicuous service. Columbia Union was honored by the distinguished presence of President Harrison on the occasion of the formal opening and dedicatory exercises of the Temple, and it was Benjamin Harrison who recognized the justness of the eight-hour measure, which became a law with his approval. And Amos Cummings — than whom none were more alert to the interest of the craft—he, too, deserves the recognition that is due to Franklin, Greeley, Childs and Harrison. With the new and enlarged Temple may we not hope that all things else will be added?

CYCLE.

Proof-room Pencil Points.

When the rose-tinted morn turns the gray into red,
Into diamonds and silver and bright shining gold;
When the heart is rejoiced that the night time has fled,
And our courage returns in a full hundredfold;
Then up with a vim to the task of the day—
No indolent ling'ring, but up and away,
For the day brings us back
To the old beaten track,
But, ye Gods! Aint it awful to crawl out of bed?

The Proof-room King is unique, in that he is not invested with kingly power, wields no sceptre, and wears no crown, and does not lay claim to the divinity that is supposed to hedge ordinary kings about.

Press Reviser James M. Maloney has been confined, during the past week, to his home on account of sickness, resulting, probaby, from much exposure to the chilling northwest breezes that find their way through the cracks and crannies of that addition to the printing office so noted for architectural beauty and ventilating properties.

William H. Dexter, one of the most efficient and popular employes of this room, after about a week's illness, died on the morning of the 18th inst. at his home, 507 Massachusetts avenue northwest, a victim of pneumonia. Funeral services were held at St. Aloysius Church on Tuesday, and interment made in Mt. Olivet, comrades of George G Meade Post, No. 5, G. A. R., acting as pall-bearers.

It was recently learned, through private sources, that Samuel J. Phillips, of the New York Press, well and favorably known here, having for a long time been a compositor and reader in this office, had entered into a second and somewhat romantic matrimonial alliance with a flame of his youth—a widow of Troy. The first Mrs. Phillips was Miss Clara Klingerman, who died in this city a few years ago.

William Dorsey, or, as he is more popularly and familiarly termed by his associates, "Bill d'Orsai," who (as slanderously affirmed) was blown into the office by a Nebraska cyclone, is the great story-teller of the room. "What caused Hooly's head to burst," with some amendments and numerous emphatic embellishments, is the yarn of all others that elicits the most convulsive laughter and the most hearty applause.

The illustrated historical sketch of "The Union Printers' Home," appearing in the January number of the Typographical Journal must be of special interest to every member of No. 101, as no other Union, through its representatives, has borne a more honorable and honored part in the determination of site, erection of buildings, management, and maintenance of that beneficent institution than Columbia. Before the idea of a printer's home had taken definite shape our union was represented in the person of the late Julian L. Wright on the committee to devise a plan to dispose of the munificent gift of Childs and Drexel. John F. Connolly, at present a reviser on the Night Bill Force, was a member of the committee that determined on the advisability of establishing the Home. August Donath was the first president of the first corporation; chairman of the committee that erected comfortable, substantial, and stately buildings on the most beautiful and healthful site on the continent; gave a historical account of the institution at the time of its dedication, and was trustee from 1890 to 1892. An editor of THE TRADES UNIONIST, E. W. Patton is now, and has been since 1900, one of the honored trustees.

HIERONYMUS.

The Banquet at Bessler's.

On Wednesday, the 28th inst., members of the craft employed on the daily newspapers, with their friends, will assemble at Bessler's Hall, Pennsylvania Avenue, and after a dinner will listen to the following speakers:

"The Great Workshop—The G. P. O.," Frank Stretton; "The Experience of Starting a Newspaper," F. S. Lerch; "The Star Chapel," M. J. Maher; "The Work of the I. T. U.," T. A. Bynum; "The Times Chapel," D. S. Hussey; "Why the Rights of the Laborer Should Be Protected," John McCormick; "The Post Chapel," Frank Benzler, and "Our Honored Dead," J. T. Herbert.

The names of the gentlemen responding to the toasts, "Our Union" and the "American Federation of Labor," are William M. Garrett and Frank Morrison, respectively. J. Monroe Kreiter has been selected as toastmaster for the occasion. Price of plates, $1.25. Further information in regard thereto can be obtained from Mr. J. T. Herbert, of the Post chapel.

Bricklayers' Executive Committee.

The following is the list of members of the Executive Committee of Bricklayers' Union, No. 1: John G. Wolfe, chairman, 1023 New Jersey avenue; W. Cronin, 1415 Thirty-sixth street northwest; Charles R. Clarkson, 321 South Lee street, Alexandria, Va.; Frank Bugden, 313 Polk street, Anacostia; J. W. Furtner, 22 Quncy street northwest.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

Do you belong to the Typothetae?

Good morning, have you bought the Post?

Dexter Hussey, late of Chicago, is working on the Times.

Get the First, Second, and Third Yearbooks and compare them with the Fourth Yearbook.

Secretary Garrett paid per capita tax on 2,049 members of Columbia Union for the month of January, 1903. Watch us grow.

The newspaper compositors will pull off a banquet at Bessler's, Wednesday evening next. You will miss a good one if you fail to attend.

Miss Theresa McDonald has resigned from the Specification Division of the G. P. O., and is now employed as proofreader on the Post.

The Executive Committee of the American Federation of Labor has been in session all week at their headquarters, Typographical Temple, in this city, and many important matters have been acted upon by the body.

Aged Compositor Dead.

Charles Edwin Leves, for nearly fifty years in the employ of the Evening Star Company as compositor, died at his home, 1424 Corcoran street, early Tuesday morning, January 16. He had been ill for a year and a half, and during the past few months had been confined to his bed. He was seventy-seven years years of age, and leaves a widow, Mrs. Rosamond C. Leves, whom he married fifty-three years ago. The funeral was held from his home last Saturday morning, and the body was taken to Hagerstown for burial. A committee of fellow employees attended the funeral in a body, and acted as pall-bearers.

First Division.

Tim Ring is seriously indisposed—trouble, rheumatism. We hope that Tim will be as strong of limb as he is of brain.

T. H. McGill is quite indisposed and unable to occupy his frame. Speedy recovery and better health in the future, Mac.

Mr. Davidson wore an apron a whole week without discovering that the pocket contained a dollar bill, put there by a former wearer. McGraw found the dollar and put it in his sock.

Mr. W. M. Murphy, of St. Louis, is being entertained at present by his amiable brother in-law, Charley Warren, of the S.-G. Cat. Mr. Murphy is a representative business man of the big Missouri town.

I regret to chronicle the illness of Robert Miller. Bob has been greatly missed by the boys, for he is a very pleasant and agreeable gentleman; and that he may speedily recover is the oft-expressed wish of us all.

George Johnson, jr., of the S.-G.Cat., is excused from the office owing to sickness. Brother Johnson has the sympathy of the entire B. H. force, all of whom hope to see his cheerful countenance at the same old stand soon again.

Robert Fleming, recently arrived from New Orleans, will soon accept the responsible position of proofreader in the office of the Globe Printing Company. Mr. Fleming at one time was editor of the Trade Unionist of New Orleans.

Frank Bates, the efficient sergeant-at-arms of our union, reliable and painstaking employe, and good fellow, has annonnced his candidacy for election as delegate. The banner division of the G. P. O—the first—will undoubtedly give Frank undivided support, providing "Pard" has no objection.

Charley Groome received very sad news from his Mississippi home last week, the receipt of a telegram telling him that his brother John had died. Mr. John Groome was a highly respected and influential citizen of his State, and at the time of his sudden taking off was a justice of the peace. Charley has the sympathy of his legion of friends.

Mr. Clark is agitating the formation of a First Division bowling club. There is no reason why one can not be successfully launched, and many why one should. It is one of the healthiest of physical exercises and a source of much entertainment as well. There is no lack of willing talent. A bowling alley can be rented for an evening at the small cost of about 35 cents per man. For pointers, see the members of the Second Division team.

George Terwilleger, of New York; F. M. Penn, of Alexandria, Va.; Will L. Mattocks, of Albuquerque, N. M., and Robert C. Starr, jr., of Florence, S. C., are new appointees whose smiling countenances denote their happiness at receiving the official beckon of Uncle Sam. All are strangers to me with the exception of "Bob" Starr, who is thoroughly known to the newspaper fraternity of the Palmetto State, he having been printer, reporter and editor successively.

Sydney J. Marshall is the author of a very interesting publication, "King of Kor; or, 'She's' Promise Kept." It is a sequel to Rider Haggard's "She," and said by many to equal it. Mr. Marshall set all the type himself, and had plates made, and placed his book on the market himself. He is an artist of no mean ability, and was thus enabled to produce his own views. Mr. Marshall, besides his regular employment in this room and his literary efforts, also finds time to teach a dramatic school of art. Here's a man of energy for you, and one deserving of success.

Nonpareil Council is to be congratulated for having on its membership roll gentlemen of such ability and popularity as were recently installed as its officers for the ensuing year. The entertainment, which followed the official exercises, was excellent. Song and story followed a varied and abundant feast, and there were other things to "cheer" besides the evenly-balanced program. All were happy when I left, particularly so was Phil Nachman. He was seen eating a ham sandwich, and declaring at the same time that it was the best oyster sandwich he'd eaten during the evening.

Chairman Mabrey has returned to us somewhat in better health than when he was forced in bed two weeks ago suffering from a mild case of nervous indigestion. At one time Mr. Mabrey was so ill that his family and intimate friends became apprehensive enough to notify his brother, the Hon. T. W. Mabrey (late speaker of the Missouri House of Representatives, and now deputy collector of customs at St. Louis), who responded by hastening to the brother's bedside. Outside of the pleasure of his brother's company, and appreciating the fact of having had demonstrated to him his immense popularity in this city in the hour of illness, our worthy chairman has no particular desire to experience another fortnight of not being able to eat, drink, or keep still.

Charles M. Sizer, one of the "old reliables" of this division for years, was recently transferred to the Library Branch. His departure occasioned surprise and regret. Charley was chairman of this room for four successive terms, and naturally, as in everything else he undertakes, this official assignment was fruitful of the best results of an evenly balanced temperament and brain. The Library is the most beautifully-appointed workshop in the world, and its corps of workmen is culled from the most efficient in the Hon. P. P.'s employ. That this is so is also readily acknowledged when the transfer list to the Library also included the name of that popular personage, Dr. Wm. H. Murphy, recently of the S.-G. Cat force. Everybody ought to know "Doc," for a better natured and more cultivated little gentleman never stepped in the leather. Good health and success to you, boys!

COLUMBIA UNION'S MEETING.

Large Attendance and Much Business Transacted.

Columbia Union was called to order Sunday at its Temple by President Johnson. Minutes of previous meeting were read and approved, and cards deposited since last meeting were read.

The Nominations Committee reported favorably upon the applications of John C. Yates, Harry C. Halcer, Charles C. Hildebrand, Robert Fletcher, and J. E. Best; for reinstatement, Edith B. Fenton, formerly of Kalamazoo; permit issued to Thomas J. Becker. C. E. Richards, in accordance with recommendations at last meeting, was admitted, and W. F. Harris accepted as an apprentice member. The obligation was also administered to W. S. (Ajax) Griffith.

Upon report of Business Committee relative to appeal of E. C. Grumley, a proofreader in the Specification, against payment of a fine imposed by Chairman Hauer, sustaining both chairman and chapel, and recommending the remittance of the fine on account of laws beformerly loosely inforced, was disposed of by the union upon proposition being split and Mr. Rodier moving chairman be sustained, which carried; then Mr. Gompers moved the recommendation of remitting the fine by the committee be non-concurred in; this was accepted and the fine was made to stand.

The chair ruled in reply to an inquiry of one Mr. K. M. Gitt, employed at Hayworth's at night, relative to night rate in book and job offices, that the old morning newspaper scale would be the standard.

Mr. Bynum, chairman of the Printing Committee, reported that the Yearbook would be ready for distribution the coming week, and requested that the committee be given the privilege of selling the individual half-tone cuts to members, and that the half-tone cuts of authors of articles be returned. Request granted.

The Grievance Committee reported upon cases of John Coleman, horseshoer, Hecht & Co., and W. B. Moses & Son.

The officers of the union, upon motion of Mr. Hall, were directed to ascertain if his amendment, relative to change in book and job scale, would interfere with any existing law of Congress, and if so to have an amendment introduced in Congress to remove same.

The firm of Corby Thompson, whose attitude toward organized labor is very antagonistic, was, upon motion of Mr. Babcock, referred to the Grievance Committee.

President Johnson suggested the enlargement of the duties of the committee appointed some time ago to enter into an agreement with the proprietors of machine offices. A motion by Mr. Rowe to that effect was carried, and a member each from the Laws and Eight-Hour Committees were added to said committee.

Secretary Garrett reported that a number of proprietors of printing plants who are passive members of the union, are active members of the Typothetae, and suggested that some action be taken whereby they must relinquish their membership in the union.

Mr. Lerch introduced the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to look into the feasibility of establishing a municipal printing office.

Communication received from the manager of the Globe Printing Company requesting that the decision of the union, making work after hours on holidays double price, be arbitrated. The body decided that the interpretation of the scale of prices was not a question to be arbitrated and the extra price must be paid and the Globe Company so notified.

The communication from the secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor in reference to repeal of the "Old Desert Land Act" and the commutation clause in the "Homestead Act," was referred to this body's delegates to the Central Labor Union.

TABLE BOARD.—Good table board in private family $15 per month; also furnished room for two; near G. P. O. 819 New Jersey avenue, northwest.

Second Division.

Goodkey has developed into a very "fine" chairman.

Congress deserves the thanks of the entire country for taking the duty off coal. Now let them take it off all the necessaries of life.

We are pleased to see our friend Marston "called up higher," as it were. Surely it was a deserved promotion, as "Al." is competent to fill any position in the office. He has always been a good union man and has served our organization with distinction in many different capacities.

While we—unlike certain members of the Proof-room—don't claim to be infallible when we quote from memory from some author, long gone to rest, in order to "point a moral or adorn a tale," nevertheless it seems to us that if some people, whose names we deem it superfluous to mention here, would first "take the beam out of their own eyes," or words to that effect, they would have less time for taking the moles out of their brother's. We acknowledge that Burns said thousands and not millions mourn, but we understood the genial bookworm to say that we had said thousands in our first article about the coal strike investigation. The idea we desired to convey was the same, we think, as that of the poet we quoted. Am I not correct in this, Mr. Bookworm? The same may be said in regard to our Biblical quotation, for what we said may not have been a verbatim et literatim quotation, nevertheless the idea we desired to convey was the same as that of our Master when He was talking in parables to His disciples in regard to the uncertainty of all things.

While what "Imjay," alias "Hot Scotch, Jr.," has to say about Mr. Carnegie's gifts of public libraries to this and other cities may be true and very commendable in its way, nevertheless there are a great many union workingmen all over this country in whose memories there still lingers the neverdying echo of the Homestead riots, the charged barbed wire fences, and men—union men—forced to give up their partly paid for homes and positions to be supplanted by imported Poles and Hungarians. Had the gentleman, whom our contemporary eulogizes so profusely, granted the reasonable request of his men and he—although he had "hied himself far from the maddening crowd's ignoble strife" to his cosy little castle in dear old Scotland, don't you know—could have cabled, "Grant their request," all would have been well. But the message that the men looked for never came. No doubt the kind hearted gentleman is trying to make amends for the "mistakes of his youth," so we will throw the "mantle of charity" over him and all will be forgiven if, when he gives money to build a library, he will also endow it as it costs almost as much to pay the expenses of keeping it up as it does to erect the building.

THE MONUS CLUB.

The Initial Banquet of 1903 Eclipses All Predecessors.

The general committee of this organization, which makes few mistakes in the selection of its toastmaster, scored the hit of its existence in designating F. N. Whitehead to fill that position on Sunday evening last.

Judge Cochran, of Missouri, the principal speaker, was in rare form, proving entertaining with craft stories of the Missouri river section in the early '70's, mingled with bits of philosophy in the fields of labor and fellowship. He feelingly closed with an allusion to the evening as being an oasis in the desert of a congressional life.

Miss Nellie V. Nichols, whose services were again secured through the efforts of Messrs. Ellis and McKean, responded with numerous musical selections, to the material enlightenment of the occasion.

Col. J. E. Slack responded in the enforced absence of Hon. Wm. P. Brownlow.

The speeches of Messrs. Hall, Bynum and Johnson were in a more serious vein. Other participants in the program were Messrs. Sutton, Gompers, Smoot, McEnerny, Purvis, Harrison, Pulman and Professor Harvel.

The Scroll, the work of F. D. Smith, scribbler, was appreciated.

Samuel Leffingwell Dead.

Samuel F. Leffingwell, known nationally among union printers, died at his home 1116 West Twenty-sixth street, Indianapolis, Ind., Wednesday night, January 14. He was in his seventy-third year. He was one of the oldest printers in the country.

Mr. Leffingwell has had a varied career. He has been printer, reporter and editor, and has given the union printers of America good service as an organizer and promoter of their interests. Mr. Leffingwell was born in Chillicothe, O., in 1830. There he learned the trade of a printer and afterwards married Miss Louise Higley, of Chillicothe. He served in both the Mexican and civil wars, and returned to his home after the latter struggle bearing the title of major.

He was known throughout the United States as a labor leader, and at one time published a labor organ called The Organette. He served as reporter and telegraph editor on the Sentinel. He was a charter member of the first typographical union, organized at Cincinnati, and attended the golden jubilee of that organization recently.

CHIEF CLERK COLLINS' DEATH

From Printer to Responsible Position in Government Printery.

ALWAYS A STAUNCH UNION MAN

For Thirty-five Years in Government Employ—Became Chief Clerk in 1889—Prominent in Masonic Circles—At One Time in District Militia—Funeral One of the Largest Ever Held in the District—Many Resolutions of Condolence.

Last Friday morning, January 23, Mr. William H. Collins, chief clerk of the Government Printing Office, who had risen about 6 o'clock and was busying himself about the house, was stricken with paralysis, which terminated fatally about 10 o'clock the following Sunday night. He had been engaged at his duties at the office the day preceding, and is not known to have been suffering any ill health or discomfort previous to the stroke. He did not regain full consciousness at any time after the attack, but remained in a comatose state until death occurred.

Mr. Collins began his apprenticeship as a printer in the Government Printing Office in 1867, while the late Hon. John D. Defrees was public printer. When he had served three years he showed such aptitude for and knowledge of the trade that Col. A. M. Clapp, who had succeeded Mr. Defrees, decided that he was worth full journeyman's wages and ordered that he be so paid in future, and Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, indorsed Colonel Clapp's action by waiving the fourth year of apprenticeship and receiving him into membership.

Shortly after this Capt. H. T. Brian, foreman of printing, took him into his office as a clerk, and from that on his promotion was rapid. For a brief time he was Congressional Record clerk at the capitol, and in 1878 he was made estimate clerk.

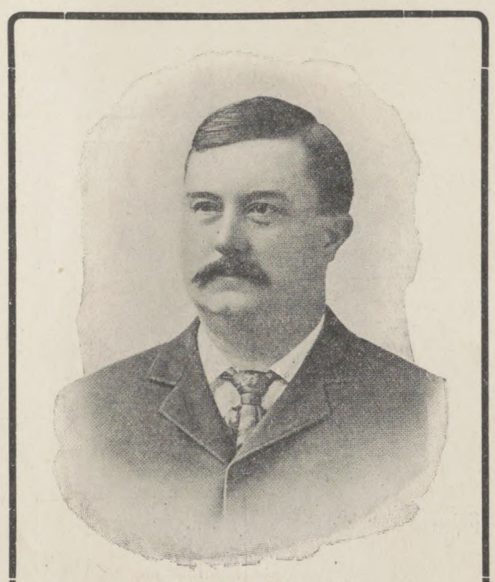
In 1889, when Mr. F. W. Palmer became public printer, Mr. Collins was appointed chief clerk, retaining the position until the incoming of Public Printer Benedict, who made Mr. W. S. Waterbury chief clerk, but retained Mr. Collins in a responsible confidential position, When, in 1897, Mr. Palmer was again appointed public printer, he restored Mr. Collins to the chief clerkship, in which position he remained until his death.

As chief clerk Mr. Collins had the business of the office "at his fingers' ends." Whatever there was to know about the purchases of machinery and material, he knew, as well as the relations of the office to the various departments and bureaus of the Government, with the several heads of which he was deservedly popular.

In his relations with the employees he was always approachable, affable, and obliging. No one who went to him with a reasonable request went away with a refusal, and he found many ways to serve the thousands of workpeople in the office, to their comfort and advantage, which won him the respect of all and the affection of those with whom he was brought into close relations.

Between Mr. Collins and Captain Brian, to whose estimate of his worth Mr. Collins owed the first advancement which placed him in line for promotion to the high position to which he attained, there always existed the closest and most intimate friendship—more a brotherly than a friendly relation—and between Mr. Collins and Mr. C. M. Robinson the bonds were almost as close, as in fact were those which bound him to a number of the old employees. Long years of intimate association had made them almost members of one family, and the deep grief at Mr. Collins' death is not confined to those united to him by ties of blood.

Mr. Collins was a prominent Mason, having entered the order in 1871; was twice secretary aad three times master of Anacostia Lodge, No. 21; past high priest of Washington Naval Royal Arch Chapter, No. 6; deputy grand high priest of the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia in 1896, declining election to the office of grand high priest of 1897; and a life member of Columbia Commandery, Knights Templar. Among none is his untimely death more sincerely deplored than by the Masonic fraternity, of which from early manhood he had been a consistent and honored member.



WILLIAM H. COLLINS.

In his younger years Mr. Collins was an officer in the District militia, in which organization, as in all others with which he was connected, he was popular with all. Having served a number of years he retired with the respect and friendship of the entire membership.

After concluding his duties each day at the office, it was Mr. Collins' greatest delight to engage in some kind of manual work about his home, in the way of improvements and repairs. A china closet constructed of hard wood and glass, for which he bought the lumber at the yard, constructed entirely by himself, is a splendid specimen of his handiwotk. At another time he concreted his cellar by his own labors, and to reconstruct and repair latrobes and ranges was an annual performance Recently he installed a furnace system, in which he took the keenest pleasure.

Mr. Collins leaves a widow, two sons and three daughters to mourn the loss of a husband of twenty-six years of devotion and a father whose watchful care, indulgent oversight and kindness were ever theirs.

The funeral services were held at St. Mark's Episcopal Church under the auspices of Anacostia Lodge of Masons, escorted by Columbia Commandery of Knight Templars, at which Naval Chapter was represented by a committee, and was largely attended, not only by his associates of the Government Printing Office, of whom there were several hundred, all being given permission to absent themselves from the office for the purpose who wished, but by numerous friends from other Government departments and citizens, many of whom had known him from boyhood in this, the city of his nativity and the scene of his life's labors. The honorary pallbearers were Maj. E. A. Clifford, Capt. H. T. Brian, Oscar J. Ricketts, Warren Mitchell, J. M. A. Spottswood, and W. J. Simmons. The interment was at Rock Creek cemetery.

The night forces combined and sent a beautiful floral piece, consisting of a broken column, to the house of the late Mr. Collins.

Many of the divisions of the Government Printing Office met and passed resolutions of sympathy, as given below:

FIRST DIVISION.

At a meeting of the First Division chapel, held Monday, January 26, 1903, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Divine Providence to take from us so suddenly William H. Collins, our most esteemed chief clerk, who began his career as a printer in the First Division, and who had endeared himself to us all by his genial good fellowship and pleasant greetings and by his ever-ready, willing and helping hand where his assistance might chance to be needed; who, by manly and faithful performance of the many duties devolving upon him, won our highest respect and admiration; therefore

At a meeting of the representatives of the various union chapels of the Government Printing Office, held Monday, January 26, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It is with profound sorrow we learn of the death of William H. Collins, Chief Clerk of the Government Printing Office, which occurred on Sunday, January 25, 1903, as expressive of our sentiments in regard to our lamented associate; be it

Resolved, That William H. Collins was a man of exceptional integrity of character. This quality, together with his quick and clear apprehension of the most judicious way of settling such official questions as came before him, and his notable devotion to official duty, makes his death a truly serious loss to the Government Printing Office. He was uniformly courteous and obliging, never ignoring opportunity to contribute to the benefit of others. His sympathetic kindness to those in distress, and his unfeigned geniality to his official associates drew to himself a current of affectionate regard. The qualities of character that distinguished him as an official made of him a model husband and father, and a good citizen.

Resolved, That a copy of this testimonial to the high character of William H. Collins be suitably engrossed and presented to his family with the sincere condolence of his associates in the Government Printing Office.

The following resolutions were adopted by this chapel, upon learning of the death of W. H. Collins:

WHEREAS, The unfaltering hand of Providence has deemed it wise to take from us one of our number; it is

Resolved, That in the death of William H. Collins we have lost an efficient, honest, and faithful co-worker and friend. And we, the employes of the Treasury Division of the Government Printing Office, extend to the bereaved wife and family our condolence and heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement. Feeling our own sorrow most keenly, we know that their inestimable loss is irreparable. Those who have known Mr. Collins intimately in his business life can truthfully testify that they have ever found him a safe prudent, and capable official, endowed with common sense and honest with his fellowmen. To his friends he was cordial and warmly attached and never more happy than when in their society. As a citizen he has held important positions of honor and trust which he discharged with scrupulous fidelity, and in the closer relation which it was our privilege to know him the innate qualities of a warm and generous heart and an honorable and upright character were fully revealed.

Resolved, That these resolutions be presented to the family of the deceased, and a copy thereof be printed in THE TRADES UNIONIST.

Death of Walter M. Aler.

On Thursday last, January 22, 1903, after a somewhat prolonged illness, occurred the death of Walter M. Aler, a well known and highly esteemed printer of this city.

Walter M. Aler was born in Martinsburg, W. Va., March 6, 1873. He became a member of Columbia Union, No. 101, on October 16, 1892, and held membership in said body to the time of his death. He was employed for some time in THE TRADES UNIONIST office and later on when his health would permit he worked at Gibson Bros. Being of a courteous and cheerful nature he had many friends both in and without the craft.

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Aler, three sisters, Misses Anna, Lillian, and Ida, and three brothers, Samuel, Royal W., and Vernon survive him and have the sympathy of their many friends and acquaintances in their bereavement.

Many floral pieces attested the esteem in which he was held by friends and fellow-craftsmen.

Funeral services were held at the residence of his parents, No. 611 M street northwest, Monday at 2 o'clock, Rev. Dr. Green, of Cavalry Baptist Church, officiating. Interment was made in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Death of Granville Harford.

Granville Harford, a veteran printer of this city, and a member of Columbia Typographical Union, for a long time an official of said organization in the position of doorkeeper, passed to the Great Unknown, at his late residence, 903 C street northeast, on Monday, January 26, aged 64 years.

Mr. Harford began his career as a typesetter in Polkinhorn's old establishment where a great many of our old timers served their apprenticeship. For a long time he was employed in the G. P. O. He was never known to turn down a fellow craftsman in hard luck. With his death Washington loses an old land mark among printers.

A wife and daughter and a brother, who is a bookbinder in the G. P. O, survive him.

Mr. Harford was of an affable disposition and well known to many printers of this and other cities. He was chairman of the Post-Office Department Printing Office at the time of his demise.

Dropsy and asthma were the cause of his death.

Funeral took place Wednesday afternoon from his late residence at 3 p. m., three of his fellow workmen—Messrs. Rock, Dony, and Melius acted as pall bearers.

Death of Alfred Glenmore Appich.

On Sunday, January 25, 1903, at his home, 718 Tenth street northwest, occurred the death of Alfred G. Appich, a member of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, in the twenty-sixth year of his age.

He was the son of J. W. and the late Alice R. Appich.

Funeral was held from his late residence Tuesday, January 27, and interment was made at Alexandria, Va.

Death of Abraham J. Gompers.

Word was received here Thursday morning of the death of Abraham J. Gompers, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gompers of this city, at Denver, Colo.

The young man had been in Denver, Colo, for about a year and a half in quest of better health and hopes were entertained for his recovery,

Pneumonia was the cause of his demise, and his age was 27 years. The remains will be brought to New York where they will interred in the family plot.

His parents, two brothers, Samuel J., and Alexander, and two sisters, Misses Florence and Sadie, survive him and to them goes out the sympathy of many friends and acquaintances in their bereavement.

Treasury Branch.

Several laborers were transferred to the main office last week.

Miss Nellie Blair and Mrs. Annie Jewett, of the press room, are on the sick list.

Miss Mary E. Mangan, of the folding room, was absent several days the first of the week.

Theodore Reier, our Baltimore pressman, is still confined to his room, but is convalescing.

Mrs. Molan, wife of M. G. Molan, who has been sick the greater part of the winter, is gradually improving,

James Willis returned from leave last week. He spent part of his time visiting relatives and friends at Harrisburg.

Edmund Shaw, one of our copyholders, returned to work Monday after an absence of several days on account of sickness.

JOHN MITCHELL has been re-elected President of the United Mine Workers without opposition.

THIS is the sixtieth birth-day anniversary of WILLIAM MCKINLEY, a man honored throughout the world.

HENRY M. TELLER was chosen to succeed himself as United States Senator by the Legislature of Colorado on the 24th instant.

THE estimated annual cost of maintaining the Executive Mansion, since recent additions and repairs, brings the figures up to $110,264.

How is it that there is always a law handy to define the rights of labor, but with the aggressions of capital the law is subject to doubtful interpretation and of no avail?

WM. J. STONE was last week chosen United States Senator by the Missouri Legislature to succeed GEORGE G. VEST, whose term will expire on the 4th of March next. Mr. VEST has been a conspicuous figure in the national body since 1879

SENATORS are between the devil and the deep sea trying to patch up an anti-trust measure which will prove acceptable to the trusts and at the same time win the approval of the President. The same sort of haggling is noticeable in the consideration of the immigration and eight-hour bills.

IN several sections of the country, where the severe cold weather has afforded an excuse for the practical effort to "get coal," train loads of the precious fuel have been looted and appropriated. In some instances the onslaught has been led by the clergy and other prominent citizens. In Chicago, on Tuesday of this week, a party of nearly one thousand men, women, and boys carried away the contents of five carloads. Necessity knows no law.

"Get Coal."

The "get coal" convention, with a membership representing many States of the Union, and whose object it is to locate the blame for the shortage and continued high price of coal and to suggest measures for relief, began its session in the assembly room of the Shoreham Hotel, on Tuesday of this week. Everybody vested with authority in the enforcement of the anti-trust law came in for a good sound drubbing. The meeting was presided over by Senator MASON, of Illinois, who in his opening remarks charged that the coal dealers had entered into a conspiracy to limit the supply of coal to the different cities of the country in order to keep up the prices of fuel. He advocated Government ownership of the coal mines and in closing declared that if legislation does not give to the people their rights the commune will take up the matter and there will be revolution. Mayor MABURY, of Detroit, said the action taken by the people of his city had resulted in a great slump in the price of coal there, and advised concert of action by the various municipalities of the country. Mr. T. E. TARSNEY, Corporation Counsel of the city of Detroit, Representative GAINES, of Tennessee, and others, each and severally paid their respects to the coal trust in no uncertain way, all of which will probably have about the same effect as a string of resolutions expressive of sympathy for the "struggling and suffering Boers" opposed by English greed for gold.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Hon Charles F. Cochran, of Missouri, gave the boys the talk of the evening at the Momus Club banquet of last Sunday a week ago, I heard, and told many reminiscences of the Missouri River printers. I knew Mr. Cochran's predecessor in Congress, Hon. George C. Crowther, at Leavenworth, nearly thirty-seven years ago, when I was a messenger boy in the Leavenworth Evening Bulletin and he was a case-holder thereon. As I already knew a little of printing, I used to "distribute" type for the boys occasionally on Sunday, and I remember having done so for Mr. Crowther, who was himself quite a young man then. He afterwards published a paper, at Marysville, Kans., I think, and was Secretary of the Kansas State Senate in 1872, when the Pomeroy Senatorial bribery explosion shook the nation. Senator York, when his name was called, said:

"I vote for Samuel C. Pomeroy, having been paid $7,000 to do so, which I now place in the custody of the Senate."

Of course there was a tremendous excitement, and a new ballot was ordered immediately, at which John J. Ingalls, who remained a Senator for eighteen years, was elected.

The $7,000 was turned over to Secretary Crowther, and for six months it remained in his possession, unclaimed. Pomeroy denied the bribery charge and of course did not claim the money; it did not belong to the State, and Senator York had given it up. After a while Pomeroy concluded that it was his after all, and then it was said that Crowther was not to be found, but I guess that was untrue—merely a joke to round off the story. Pomeroy was dead politically ever after, but no more so than was Senator York, one of whose brothers, Dr. York, was one of the victims of the murderous Bender family. The Benders kept a roadside hotel, and frequently travelers who stopped there never went any further. The disappearance of Dr. York made such a rumpus that the Benders pulled up and flew, when an investigation of their premises disclosed the fact that a large number of murders had been committed, and a posse was sent after them, which returned in a few days and reported that they could not be found, but everybody believed that they were found, but that the posse had no coffins to bring them back in. I believe old Sam Wood was one of the posse. Sam was a character whom I knew at Topeka while he was a member of the legislature about 1867—we boarded at the same hotel, the Gordon House. One day at dinner Sam was proclaiming loudly what the members from the southern part of the State wanted, when old Wilt Gordon, uncle of the proprietor, said:

"Colonel Wood, who are these southern members?"

"Well, I'm one of 'em," said Wood.

"God!" said old Wilt in a tone that set the table in a roar.

Sam Wood contested Harrison Kelley's seat in Congress about 1887 or '88, unsuccessfully, and was killed off in a county-seat war a year or two after.

Crowther eventually drifted over into Missouri and was elected to Congress from the St. Joe district on the tidal wave of 1894, but the wave receded and he was stranded in 1896.

I believe I started out to write about Mr. Cochran. I never knew Mr. Cochran.

Among our good friends in Congress who will retire at the end of the present session is Hon. Joel P. Heatwole, of Minnesota, who declined a renomination last fall. As chairman of the House Committee on Printing he has been a consistent friend of the Government Printing Office and its employes. A good friend of the Printing Office and the Union was elected to the Fifty-eighth Congress from Pennsylvania, Hon. W. O. Smith, of Punxsutawney, a former compositor in the office, a man who knows its needs and who will ever be alive to its interests. I commend him to Speaker-to be Cannon as good material for the Committee on Printing. A brother, Frank D. Smith, is now employed on the Night Bill Force.

* * * *

Speaking of "Smith," that's a poor sort of a name, any way. You've always got to qualify it in some way or it conveys no idea at all. We have 17 of them in our Yearbook, and Shelby more'n a hundred miles away. I hardly ever think of a man as "Smith." In my mind he's Franksmith, or Waltersmith, or Genesmith, or Jeffsmith, as the case may be. Col. Nicholas Smith, the son-in-law of Horace Greeley, once lamented his name, saying that he often makes pleasant acquaintances while traveling or otherwise among strangers, and on separating his new friend will say:

"I have enjoyed your society very much and would like to remember you. What is your name?"

"Smith," Nicholas is compelled to answer.

"Pshaw!" returns the other, "I was in earnest."

But I suppose the people who bear the name are not really to blame. They were born that way.

* * * *

Looking over the list of members in the Yearbook, I discover that other common names are almost as well represented as Smith. There are 6 Browns and a Browne, 6 Clarks and a Clarke, 9 Davises and 2 Davieses, 6 Ellises, 10 Evanses, 5 Fitzgeralds, 6 Halls, 15 Johnsons and 3 Johnstons, 7 Joneses, 10 Kings, 5 Lewises, 7 Maloneys, 6 Martins, 16 Millers, 7 Morgans, 5 Murphys, 4 McCormicks and a McCormack, 5 O'Connells, 5 Phillipses, 3 Reeds, 3 Reids, and 1 Read, 8 Robertses, 5 Sullivans, 6 Taylors, 5 Thomases, 5 Thompsons and a Thomson, 7 Wallaces, 13 Williamses, 12 Wilsons, 6 Woods, 6 Wrights, 5 Youngs, and very many names in duets, trios, and quartettes. But they can't help it.

* * * *

A friend asked me one evening:

"Why don't you write an article some time on the benefits the typewriter has conferred on the printing business?"

I didn't make any very satisfactory or intelligent answer at the time, but it set me to thinking of the matter—not that I had not thought of it before, for I would not like to admit that I do not originate all of my ideas.

But, to go at the matter, the typewriter has not been an unmixed blessing to the printer. It is true that it is much easier to read typewriting than ordinary manuscript; but it is also true that a large proportion of typewriters are not as well informed as they ought to be, and the proofreader has to contend at times with the problem of the typewriter's probable error as well as the compositor's. Much of the work of the typewriter is to copy manuscript, good or bad, as the case may be, with the probabilities in favor of the latter, in which case he or she may mistake a badly written word for an entirely different one, and as the word is perfectly plain as typewritten, if the error is ever corrected the author will probably have to do it, unless the sense suggests the proper word to compositor or proofreader. But that the typewriter greatly increases the volume of printing, which is the real desideratum, is undoubtedly true, for the labor of writing is a great deterrent to many who find they can set forth their ideas with much more comfort by using a typewriter or dictating to a typewriter. (Having but one term to indicate two different things is a little awkward at times.)

But that the typewriter has worked to the detriment of literary excellence is as true as that typesetting machines lessen typographical excellence. Both have contributed to greatly increase the amount of literary work, and both have contributed to its deterioration.

There are a number of pressmen ex-delegates, who served as such before the pressmen formed a separate international organization, who are entitled to membership in the Ex-Delegates' Association and we will welcome them into its ranks. One of them is Jerry Donovan, who keeps a house of entertainment on Fourteenth street, above U. I believe the others are all in the press room. Some of my friends want me to jump on Judge Gray, of the Anthracite Coal Strike Arbitration Commission, as performing more like an attorney for the operators than an unbiased judge. Judge Gray has acquired an honorable name as an able and impartial jurist and I do not want to blast his reputation if I can help it. So let us wait until the inquiry is over and the verdict rendered, and then Judge Gray will be responsible to me and the American people for his course and action.

* * * *

The troubles men have in getting fuel this winter are sometimes terrible and pathetic, and among those who have had such experiences is John Purvis, of the Night Bill Force. His coal bin getting low, and he having conscientious scruples against paying $12 per ton, Billy Burchfield told him one night that he knew where he could get coal for $7 50 but that he would have to be on the ground at 7 o'clock the next morning to do so. The pair stayed up, and while waiting they expended three or four dollars apiece. They then had to walk to the navy-yard, and during the trip Burchfield lost his gloves and Purvis his lunch-box. On swearing that he had six small children down with the measles, Purvis succeeded in getting half a ton at the rate of $7 50 per ton, but, all things considered, it was not much more economical than the $12 coal. Dr. Johnny Atkinson gave Purvis a prescription for his measly children and the boys constructed a lunchbox for him out of page papers.

My friend Andrew Keiner is still on the disabled list, having been sick two months or more, and from all I can hear there is no prospect of immediate improvement. He is not a goat, if he has got whiskers, and his physical condition is hardly such now as to thrive on tomato cans and the crops that grow on billboards, even if he were, so I think it is up to us to see how he is coming along. Savvy?

The Carriage and Wagon Workers, Local No. 72, will hold an entertainment and ball on Monday, February 16, at Odd Fellows' Hall, Seventh street northwest.

H. P. Hanson, President of the Trades and Labor Council and Secretary of United Labor Publishing Company, of Memphis, Tenn., made this office a pleasant call while in the city.

To-morrow evening the Bindery Minstrel Company repeat by request at National Rifles' Armory their New Years' eve entertainment. From the present outlook it is an assured success.

The banquet given by the newspaper compositors Wednesdey night was a highly enjoyable and successful affair. Toastmaster Kreiter was at his best and Manager (Major) Herbert had an abundance of good things to comfort and cheer.

The many friends of Lott H. Becker, late of the Fourth Division, G. P. O., will be glad to locate him and hear of his prosperity. He is at present editor and proprietor of the Wyoming County Advocate at Attica, N. Y.; is building a fine home, and from latest reports, has taken unto himrelf a better half.

Public Printer Palmer's Promotions.

Private Secretary O. J. Ricketts to be foreman of printing.

Assistant Private Secretary Fred Collins to be private secretary.

Second Division.

Dement and Max Noble are on the sick list.

Mat Maloney is confined to his bed with pneumonia. He is at Providence hospital.

Joe Lenhart has resumed his occupation at the average desk again, after an absence on account of sickness of five weeks.

M. W. Hutchinson, slug 39 of this division, who has been confined to his room with pleurisy for about six weeks, is gradually recovering, and we hope to have him with us again soon.

Daniel Halleck, of the time alley, who was called home to Brooklyn last Thursday on account of the sudden death of his mother, has the sympathy of his many friends in his bereavement.

The Public Printer did a very commendable act when he excused the employees of the office, and thus gave them an opportunity to pay their last respects to the memory of Mr. Collins, who was so universally liked by all.

The uncertainty of this life was forcibly brought to the minds of the employees of this office by the sudden death from paralysis of William H Collins, the deservedly popular and well and favorably known chief clerk. Although apparently enjoying the best of health, he was suddenly stricken down in his house just as he was about to leave for the office, and he never regained consciousness.

Mr. Collins was a self-made man in the broadest sense of the word. He entered the office as an apprentice boy in 1871, and gradually ascended, step by step, the ladder of fame, as it were, until he reached almost the topmost rung, so far as this office is concerned. It can truly bə said of him "that he bore without reproach the grand old name of Gentleman."

He was kind, thoughtful, and considerate of the rights of others, and was always trying to help some one. He was instrumental in making the burdens of life easier for many an employee of this office; he was a union man in every sense of the word. There are few men in office who had more friends than he, and he will be missed by us all, and especially those of us who had the pleasure of his personal acquaintance, as the writer had. Surely a quiet, useful, unostentatious life has gone out. His bereaved widow and fatherless children have the sympathy of the entire office. The quiet, peaceful manner in which our friend's life drifted down the river of life into the ocean of eternity seems to make Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar" appropriate to his death;

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for tide and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bells,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark.

For tho' from out our bourn of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar.

Resolutions, condoning the death of William H. Collins, chief clerk of the Government Printing Office, were read and approved.

Carpenters and Joiners, No. 190, requested information relative to Heurich matter, and were told the same was in the hands of Grievance Committee.

Washington Lodge of Machinists stated they would give a masquerade ball at National Rifles' Hall, February 26, 1903.

Stone Laborers, through the Building Trades Section, requested an indorsement of this body to a modification of their charter. The matter was referred to the Organization Committee.

A lengthy communication relative to the management of the Academy of Music and the locked out stage employes was referred to Special Committee on Stage Alliance Matters.

A Truly Progressive City.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 27, 1903.

At the monthly meeting of No. 12, the following resolutions, presented by William B. Prescott, ex-president of the I. T. U., were unanimously passed:

WHEREAS, The political economy department of the Johns Hopkins University has instituted what will be an impartial and exhaustive investigation of American trades unions, their work and its effects; and

WHEREAS, This research gives promise of resulting in the most comprehensive study of this questien from all view points of any yet undertaken; and

WHEREAS, It is a reasonable certainty that the opponents of trades unionism will leave no stone unturned to present their side of the controversy in its most favorable light; and

WHEREAS, Trades unions—ever misrepresented by the capitalist class and villified by its obsequious henchmen—should embrace with avivity this opportunity to present their case before an unprejudiced court; therefore be it

Resolved, That the officers of Baltimore Typographical Union are hereby instructed to furnish the said department access to all documents and records that it may desire; and be it further

Resolved, That the members of this and other unions are hereby requested to send to the university authorities data, such as old constitutions, resolutions, trade agreements, records and other authentic documents, that may tend to shed light on the birth and development of American trades unionism, now in their possession, so that they may be used for the the present investigation and thereafter be preserved for the benefit of posterity.

The Baltimore Morning Herald, on Monday, after devoting a column on the first page, in an editorial says:

"A FORWARD STEP.

"One of the oldest labor organizations in the United States is the Typographical Union of Baltimore. For years it has enjoyed a reputation for ability and conservatism. Recently it has sought to put its members in line with the best thought and intelligence of the day, especially in the study of political economy. The series of lectures now being delivered by men who have won reputations in universities and public life is an illustration of the enlightened policy of the organization.

"Yesterday another important step was made by adoption of resolutions placing the union in closer relation with the Johns Hopkins University. All students of political economy will be deeply interested in the resolutions.

"This action is not only an excellent sign of the times and a credit to the union itself, but is most welcome as showing how the Johns Hopkins University is getting in closer touch with the vital interests of the city.

"Nothing but good can come of investigations for broader knowledge and a better understanding."

No. 12 is at present managing a series of lectures, at which the speakers have all been men who have gained prominence through their knowledge of the subject. The lectures are followed by discussions, during which questions propounded by the audience are answered by the speaker. Those who lecture are unbiased and free from partisanship, and the meetings thus far have been successful and profitable. Dr. Jacob Hollander, who holds the chair of political economy at the Johns Hopkins, occupied the platform at one of the meetings and Dr. George E. Barnett, associate professor of political economy at the university, is scheduled as the next speaker.

Professor Hollander, when shown the resolutions, said: "I have been apprised of the passage of the resolutions, and I wish to express my appreciation of the spirit of typographical union in aiding in the investigation. The investigation," Dr. Hollander continued, "is being made by the post-graduate students of the department of political science, and it will take about three years to complete the work."

When it is taken into consideration that Johns Hopkins University ranks with Yale, Harvard, Princeton, and the University of Pennsylvania, the importance of the foregoing resolutions will be appreciated.

While I have no authority for so stating, I believe that any data on the subject, sent by any member of the I. T. U., will be accepted by the officers of No. 12. CUBAN.

Proof-room Pencil Points.

After an absence of many years, Richard B. Topham returned from Sandy Bar, N. J., to the Specification Room, G. P. O. The old-time lusty bawl of "base ball!" doubtless greeted his entrance.

Reviser H. L. Murray (No. 029), a native of the elevated forests of western Pennsylvania, in the unrestricted exercise of that liberty of speech that characterizes all mountaineers, does not hesitate at any time to express in forcible terms his supreme contempt for Palmetto State chivalry.

First reader Farmer Matt. L. Allison (No. 01), who hails from a town of Irish name on the blue Juniata, in addition to his well performed office duties, gives time and attention to the practice of one of the fine arts; and though he has not as yet reached perfection in the musical art, his blowing—on the flute—is said to be enchanting.

Chief reviser Henry W. Weber is the founder and accomplished leader of a musical organization known as the "Rebew" (often corrupted to "Hebrew") orchestra, composed of a large number of ladies and gentlemen who have banded together for their own improvement and the entertainment of their friends. The news having spread abroad, however, that they furnish a good quality of music "without money and without price," the requests for service from organizations and individuals who would "get something for nothing" are more than a few.

Our efficient and accommodating copy collector—Peter Rust—whose intense energy does not allow any of his faculties to rust, after due notice served upon all whom it might and it might not concern, turned his back upon all the "faire ladyes" of the capital city in general and the Government Printing Office in particular, and hied himself away to the "city of brotherly love," where he was tied "for better or worse" to one of the daughters of that ancient town. On his return he received the congratulations of his many friends, and a beautiful and useful present from the proof room employees.

Bindery Notes.

Bill Haslett has to move again.

Charley Moore returned to the fold Monday after a long illness.

One of the bookbinders in the document division has been detected patronizing a five-cent barber shop. He got a shave, a hair cut, and dinner for thirty cents. I will not honor him nor disgrace this column by printing his name. His pay at this time is $5 15 a day.

The employes of the bindery were exceedingly sorry to hear of the death of Mr William H. Collins, for so many years chief clark in the G. P. O. A suitable set of resolutions were adopted at a meeting held Monday and a beautiful floral piece in the shape of a book was sent to his late home.

There is quite a rivalry between Johnny Emerson and Patsy Finnegan. They are both using hair restorers, Emerson being partial to sage tea, while Patsy refuses to tell what kind he uses. Tim McKenna's young one, in the meanwhile, is beating them both out. Shad Burns is living in hopes.

Bobby Hewlett, of the Union Building bindery, celebrated his birthday last week, and being very popular among the ladies in that division he received many presents, including candy hearts, candy canes, horse cakes, and other articles of like description. He would have received at least one more present if the main office had been apprised of his birthday anniversary.

Printers' Banquet.

Wednesday evening the newspaper printers of the city, to the number of forty, held their first banquet and from the success and good fellowship existing a committee of one from each chapel will be appointed looking to a plan of holding similar gatherings in the future, at which employing printers will be invited as guests.

The following toasts were responded to: "Our Union," Secretary William M. Garrett; "The American Federation," Secretary Frank Morrison; "Our Departed Brethren," J. T. Herbert; "The Achievements of the International Typographical Union," T. A. Bynum; "Experiences in Starting a Newspaper," Frank S. Lerch; "Workings of the G. P. O.," Frank S. Stretton; "The Star Chapel," M. J. Maher; "The Post Chapel," Frank Benzler; "The Times Chapel," Dexter S. Hussey. J. Monroe Kreiter acted as toast master.

Letters of regret were received from many, including President Lynch and Secretary Bramwood, of the International Typographical Union.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

President Hallahan, of Hotel and Restaurant Employes, Speaks.

THEATRICAL STAGE ALLIANCE

Vice-President H. W. Sherman Presides—The Southern Expanded Metal Company and the Wood, Wire, and Metal Lathers—Bartenders Report Unfair Attitude of R. M. Leonard, Saloonist—Credentials.

Vice-President Sherman called the Central Labor Union to order Monday night, at Typograpnical Temple.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Credentials were received from Team Drivers' International Union, Local No. 372, certifying Messrs. T. Walters, W. S. Martin, J. M. Butler, William Hoist, and J. P. Connor; from Local No. 296, of Oil Wagon Drivers' Union, certifying F. H. Roland, J. S. Allison, J. W. Brown, W. R. Walls, and A. J. Dinen; from Musicians' Protective Union, No. 161, certifying Messrs. W. S. Crown, C. W. Sunderland, L. R. Boyd, Edward M. Tansill, and Wm. J. Kerngood; from Interior Marble and Slate Cutters and Setters, Local No. 5, certifying W. H. Mobley; from International Association of Marble Workers, No. 33, certifying Charles Langbine vice Mr. Niclison.

President Hallahan, of Hotel and Restaurant Employes and Bartenders' League, addressed the meeting.

Rochester City Lodge, No. 95, I.A.M., communicated the fact that they were still on strike—for twenty-one weeks—against the firm of Hohmann & Maurer (Taylor Bros.) manufacturer of thermometers.

The Wood, Wire, and Metal Lathers' International Union, No. 9, communicated that the Southern Expanded Metal Company were employing non-union men to do their lathing. They requested this body to use its influence to secure work thereon for union men. This matter was referred to the Building Trades Section.

T. H. Pickford communicated that he had paid union prices for carpenters, bricklayers, and painters during the past year, and that he was ready to sign a contract with this body, to employ only union men during the coming year. Referred to Grievance Committee.

A lengthy communication from Hod Carriers, Brick, and Mortar Wheelers' Union, No. 9468, was read and placed on file.

Bartenders' League communicated the unfair attitude of R. M. Leonard, saloonist, 1319 Seventh street northwest, and requested he be placed upon the unfair list. Referred to Grievance Committee.

Brewery workers stated that objection had been raised to the advertisement of a local brewery relative to use of union label. The brewery workmen were informed that the Central Labor Union had no jurisdiction over the use of labels by local unions.

Special committee on Theatrical Stage Alliance reported that they had secured a contract from the Academy of Music, which was not satisfactory to Alliance. On motion the matter was referred to Grievance Committee with instructions to report at next meeting. An amendment prevailed that a report be made at this meeting. More time was granted upon request of Grievance Committee.

The matter of admitting Local Union, No. 10, Elevator Constructors was laid laid over until report of special committee of A. F. of L. Executive Council.

Messrs. John Hamerstrom, C. Clarke, and J. A. Rice were appointed a committee to appear before the sub-committee of the A. F. of L., relative to Machinists and Elevator Constructors' dispute.

Report of Miners' Relief Committee was accepted and the committee discharged.

Do your teeth ache? Are they decayed? If so, have them stopped or extracted.

Dr. W. W. Abraham, Dental Surgeon, 615 Seventh street N. W., is known to be competent. Hours 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. Prices fair, work excellent.

Specification Notes.

"Who is that man I see, papa, go down the street each morn,
With lantern and with dinner pail, his features hard and worn;
His face unshaved, his hair unshorn, his jaws set hard and grim,
But bears a strong resemblance to one once called 'Sunny Jim?'"

"That man, my son, the people say, is a 'trusty' on the Spess,
They're known throughout the office by the oddness of their dress;
Because they do not have the time to comb, and fix, and shave,
Their work it is so arduous, 'tis more fit for a slave,

"But still those sacrificing ones toil on from year to year,
Eschewing all that other men consider things most dear,
Expecting no reward at all until death sets them free,
And writes for them this epitaph: 'Each did the work of three!'"

Granville Harford, who died recently, was a man whose convictions upon any question were not difficult to ascertain. He was a staunch Jacksonian-Democrat and his opposition to the colored brother led him into many a heated argument. I remember once after "Granny" had expressed himself quite forcibly on a political question, Dick Jones said to me: "You would hardly believe Harford was some years ago as bitter a Republican as he now is a Democrat. At one time there were only two Republicans in the District of Columbia. One was "Granny" Harford and the other was an old carpenter who cut off the limb of a tree between the tree and himself and fell and was killed.

I believe the death of Will Collins will be more sincerely regretted than that of any man connected with the Government Printing Office. He was a modest, unassuming, pleasant, affable, American gentleman, in whom honors and position made no change in the size of his hat nor in the warm grip of his hand. Just as an instance of the kind of a man he was: I was waiting in the hallway one day last summer to see the paymaster, when an employe of the office—one of the best fellows in world, whom I have known from my first entry into Washington, with one fault and that in the eyes of some people never to he overlooked—greeted me with a request for a loan. I told him I would be able to accommodate him in a few minutes, but, like the fellow in Texas about the pistol, he wanted his now, and dodged into Will Collins' office and returned almost instantly holding out a piece of Uncle Sam's currency and insisting that I take a walk across the street. Collins knew him thoroughly from boyhood and did not hesitate to humor his weakness when necessary.

This is a story of how a Tammany grafter was done by a practical joke. Some years ago there was a House doorkeeper—he may be there yet for all I know—who was one of the slickest ringers in it was ever my experience to encounter. He was a clever fellow in his way, very accommodating, but he had a great capacity for "booze," and could carry about as large a cargo, without spilling any of it, as any man I ever saw. Several labor advocates were constant attendants upon Congress at the time of which I speak, and O'Rourke—that was not his name, but will answer—was very attentive to carrying in their cards to members and doing other favors, and he could always find time to visit the House restaurant upon invitation, and in fact would declare himself in without being invited whenever opportunity offered. He never failed to accept any little donation that might be tendered him also. However, he was useful, and his appetite for the "old stuff," and his willingness at all times to be "seen," were overlooked. I think it was on the occasion of Labor Day celebration that several of these labor men were in New York, and O'Rourke met them and proceeded to show them the sights of the greatest city, of course at their expense. Going along the street one of them saw a street fakir selling diamonds and purchased a handsome pair of solitaire eardrops, which looked like the real thing, for ten cents. He went to Tiffany's and obtained a very elaborate jewel case, and when the "phony" stones reposed therein they looked handsome enough for a millionaire to present to his best actress girl. They found O'Rourke, and the one who put up the job opened on him something like this: "O'Rourke, you have been very close to us labor men down in Washington, and we want to show you that we appreciate your kindness. Take us to some place where we can have a small bottle or two, in a quiet back room, and we'll show you in what esteem you are held." Well, he took them to a swell place on Broadway, and after the glasses were filled the fellow who had the stones eulogized him in terms the highest for his many acts of kindness to men looking after labor measures in Congress, and wound up by presenting him the earrings, saying they were sure he would appreciate such a present for Mrs. O'Rourke more than anything else they could give. Well, sir, he opened up like a newly-nominated alderman, and the small bottles of "phiz stuff" were popping for quite a spell, and the cigars were of the 25-cent brand. I never heard the sequel, and never saw O'Rourke but once afterwards and that was some two or three years subsequently, and he then only gave me a very cool nod of recognition, but I have always had a desire to hear how he squared it with Mrs. O. when they discovered the value of the Tiffany diamonds.

The reappearance in Washington of a very well-known sensational writer, recalls an incident in his career that was the talk of Newspaper Row, New York, for a time early in the Spanish war period. At the time he was writing for one of the New York yellows at, it is said, the highest salary ever paid a newspaper man in the world, and apparently had carte blanche to say anything he pleased, for his articles, signed with his full name, that appeared daily in the editorials, fairly smoked they were so bitter, and President McKinley, Speaker Reed, and everyone else whose policies did not agree with those of the paper which claimed to have brought on the war, and whose editor-in-chief thought he was running the whole country, were roasted by this sensational writer in terms that fairly made people gasp.

Just about this time there was considerable talk about the Pope intervening in the interest of peace between this country and Spain. Whether there was any foundation for such rumor or not I do not know, but this writer did not propose to stand for any interference from anyone, as he was for war and war he was going to have, and what he proceeded to do to the Pope was a caution. The article was put in type, with the author's name in full, and was made up into a four-column special on the editorial page, and the plates made for all the presses. It was Sunday morning and the editorial page was the one needed for the "starter," and as soon as the plates were landed in the pressroom they were hustled on and a revise run out and sent to the office for an O K. Usually a few seconds only intervene between getting on the "starter" and the roar of the moving of the monster machines turning out thousands of papers a minute, especially on the big Sunday; but this morning 'twas different. Pressmen, fly boys, carriers, mailers—everybody was on edge. "What are we waiting for?" "Aint we ever going to start," and "We'll be late all right this morning," could be heard all over the big room. Presently came the order, "Destroy all copies of the paper run out; send editorial page to the foundry right away!" Then, of course, everybody was anxious to know what was up. Pretty soon down came the editorial page again, the presses soon were in motion and everything moving, and still the pressroom people wondered what could have caused the delay.

One of the pressman is authority for the statement that the first editorial page contained an article by the aforesaid writer that would have caused a riot in New York had it ever gotten out on the street, and nobody had authority to say it should not go in except the proprietor himself. When the revise went to the foreman of the pressroom, he took the responsibility to call up the owner of the paper by telephone, with the result that a new page appeared with the article left out. And no article from that gentleman's pen has ever since appeared in that paper on any subject, though, I am informed, he drew his princely salary to the end of his contract.

Bindery Notes.

ODE TO ALLEY NO. 3.

Put a horse shoe o'er our door
To keep us from real harm,
And load us up with rabbits' feet,
We badly need a charm.

This alley is infested
With a Jonah every day,
For all that we've invested,
Not a thing has come our way.

We've put our stuff in basket stock,
In oil, and even in lots,
If luck don't change we'll have to hock
Our brushes and glue pots.

In lottery tickets goes our pay,
Sometimes we even borrow,
For autos, fobs, and rings to play,
But always to our sorrow.

We've tried old tricks, we've tried new schemes,
Our hoodoo to disguise,
We did everything on earth it seems
Except to win a prize.

So put a horse shoe o'er our door
To keep us from real harm,
And load us up with rabbits' feet,
We badly need a charm.

The floral tribute of the bindery floor was among the most beautiful of those at Mr. Collins' funeral.

Pat Reilly, the shavings man, has great difficulty in convincing Goldwaite that he can not favor him as he desires.

John Emerson took a nap the other evening after dinner and upon awakening about 9 o'clock he started out to go to work thinking it was morning. John should change his usual potion.

Shad Burns had a friend take him home in an automobile the other evening, and though it was a free ride, Mrs. Burns thought Shad was getting reckless in his expenditures so she has cut off his regular lunch allowance.

Bob McLanahan complains of some of his Baltimore friends picking his pockets. He says they took his laundry ticket and all of his money. He intimates that they might as well keep the former as it is of no use to him without the latter.

Charley Benker's reasons for refusing to take what might be called the "temperance route" are rather confusing to his friends. One was that he had to go down town to get a paper and the other that he needed a tonic. His friends, who are soliciting his membership in their society, are persevering and hopeful.

The resolutions adopted on Mr. Collins' death are as follows:

WHEREAS, The Divine Maker has in His wisdom taken from among us William H. Collins, late chief clerk of the Government Printing Office; and

WHEREAS, By this we are again reminded that, "In the midst of life we are in death; mutation and change is the law of God."

WHEREAS, In his death we recognize that the public service has sustained a great loss, not alone as an official, but as a man, whom to know was to honor and respect, and the family is deprived of a loving husband and father whose loss they will deeply feel.

Resolved, That we, the employes of the bindery, feel and express our sorrow at the death of such a useful man and public servant and extend to the family of the deceased our sincere condolence in this their hour of grief.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and published in THE TRADES UNIONIST.

Card of Thanks.

The family of the late William H. Collins, chief clerk of the Government Printing Office, wish to express their deep gratitude and appreciation for the many expressions of heartfelt sympathy and affection over the death of the beloved husband and father.

His qualities were such that his friends were legion, and it is impossible to personally reply to the great number of messages of condolence, and his family take this method of acknowledging their sincere thanks. Also they desire to thank the proprietors of THE TRADES UNIONIST for their generosity in giving so much space to the publication of resolutions, etc., in connection with Mr. Collins' death.

BENEFITS OF UNION LABEL.

Strong Article in the Woman's Labor League Journal.

Organization has become universal, both by capital and labor, and the purpose of both these is practically the same, mainly to regulate wages; the one to pay as little as possible for all the labor he can get; the other to get a more equal division of the results of his toil in the increase of his wages, and the decrease of the hours of labor. Like almost everything else organization has been a matter of evolution. Being first brought about by oppression so great that the average slave's life was a holiday in comparison with that of the laboring man, men who themselves poorly clad, poorly fed, whose wives and children were suffering every deprivation in their efforts to exist under the conditions of labor that prevailed, banded together in mutual self defense, and hence the first strike.

And hence, the reason why, men made desperate by the injustice of their situation, determined that no one else should be allowed to fill their places at the old conditions, but that the conditions themselves should be changed and they and others have the work under the better way. The greatest of all American organizations is the American Federation of Labor, which contains nearly all the great national and international unions, and its membership is over 1,500,000, united for the sole purpose of advancing the interests of labor.

Hence, the labor union was looked upon with contempt by the employer. But to-day they in most cases see the healthy influence that is exerted in producing more intelligent workmen and better results from their labor, and while we deprecate the strike, we hail any and every method to bring the desired reforms by peaceful measures.

The application of the label to all goods manufactured under fair conditions is now looked upon as one of the most effective means of doing away with the resort to force. The label means that the article on which it appears is manufactured by workmen of ability; that fair wages were paid; that the sanitary conditions of the workshop were approved and that it was not the work of helpless little children. Could we be brought face to face with some of the conditions now existing in some parts of our country, every man and woman would belong to a Union Label league. You would see men paid sixty cents to a dollar a day, working for twelve or more hours; you would see children working all night long, night after night, and paid from ten to thirty cents a night; you would see little children standing on tiptoe to reach the looms at which they work; you would see some busy, remorseless machine sever a finger, a hand, or take the life of some of these babies; you would see the fingers of some of these little martyrs worn entirely off, and thus incapacitated their places again filled by little children. The miseries of these little laborers cannot be imagined; their tender strength is bearing the burden that adults cannot endure, for many years, and at tasks where one second of inattention, or of giving away to fatigue, is at the fearful risk of life or limb.

Our hearts bleed for these helpless babes, who have no childhood, whose lives are shortened, whose bodies are for life maimed, scarred, and stunted. We want to save them.

How fearful also must be the life of the miner, when the evidence of the physicians called before the commissioners brings out the fact that 75 per cent of the inmates of the county poor house were miners; 40 per cent had been crippled by accidents in the mines, and went insane through worry over their afflictions.—Woman's Labor League Journal.

TO THE CRAFT.

My dear "Old Pard" Bloomer—
He's a right good fellow,
With a mind that is ripe
And a heart that is mellow—
When he looks up his stories
He generally gets some,
Then gives them to us
Through his "Flotsam and Jetsam."

He suggests that some others
Who knew how to write
Should furnish some items,
And I think he's quite right.
So I pushed in the button
And opened the slot,
The machine began moving
And here's what I got.

I want to be a printer
And with the printers stand,
With a well-filled case in front of me
And a stick within my hand;
With copy that is plain to read
Marked "leaded" at the top,
I'd work right hard, indeed I would,
When "time" was called I'd stop.

There's a fine lot of "prints" in the G. P. O.
And they came from all over creation,
And in order to get the average up
They work like all darnation.
Some are tall, and some are short,
Many are lean—some fat—
Just so with the copy—takes long and short—
With much more "lean" than "phat."

Let us then be up and doing
With some sacrifice to make,
So while a picking and a sticking
Learn to do for others' sake.
The lives of night-men should remind us
We may make their lives serene,
When departing, leave behind us
Well-filled cases, good and clean.

Dr. Abbott and Trades Unions.

In an addrsss in Chicago recently, on The Duties of Man," the Rev. Lyman Abbott said it was the duty of every laboring man to join his trades union. "If I were a laboring man I would not be without a union card. The more independent a man is the more able he is to do for himself, the more imperatively it is his duty to join a labor union and help those who are less able to help themselves.

"Trusts are a menace. We must have a government strong enough to control all of the giant corporations, the railways and the public utilities. We must have a government strong enough to establish the price of coal when the contingency for such action arrives.

"Lastly, we must have a government strong enough to prevent child labor, which is the great shame of America to-day."

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL WASHINGTON. 2

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1903.

LET it never again be said that the ground hog is a friend of "we the people."

THE total number of persons available for military duty in the United States is 10,853,396.

THE principles of trades unionism are advanced just in proportion as the sense of justice increases.

THE receipts of the Patent Office for the year 1902 were $1,552,857. One patent was issued to a citizen of the Philippine Islands.

THE curve in Uncle Sam's backbone in the Venezuela matter had an effect like unto the shadow which suggested retirement to the ground hog.

A GENERAL strike by conductors and trainmen on many of the western railways is imminent, by reason of a refusal to allow an increase of wages.

THE Senate on Tuesday, by unanimous vote, passed the Elkins anti-trust bill. The provisions of this bill are in line with the President's recommendations.

A. C. LATIMER, of South Carolina, LEE S. OVERMAN, of North Carolina, and F. G. NEWLANDS, of Nevada, were last week elected Senators by the Legislatures of their respective States.

IT is noticed that in contemplating war with a greater power traditional lines do not stand out with the same boldness in demanding preservation as when the other fellow has the lesser number and poorer equipped battleships.

A MAN from Virginia, who neglected to give his name, has forwarded one dollar to an Auditor of the Post-Office Department as a contribution to the conscience fund, which is good, as far as it goes.

THE proposition is for "Uncle Samuel" to loan the District of Columbia $10,000,000, the amount with interest to be returned after many days. We can not see how the temptation is to be resisted.

READERS of this paper will find it to their advantage to extend their observations to the advertising columns, where fair treatment is assured by those who have adopted THE TRADES UNIONIST as a medium to signify their friendliness to labor organizations and who hope for mutual and reciprocal trade relations.

NEW YORK CITY is threatened with a newspaper venture headed by the Rev. Mr. PARKHURST. The enterprise is to serve a long-felt want, and will take on none of the "yellow" characteristics, against which the reverend doctor is leading a small sized revolt. Men of means have promised liberal donations in furtherance of the scheme, and as a wealth-distributor it has every appearance of success.

REPRESENTATIVE BRISTOW, of New York, has introduced a bill providing for an increase of salary to the President from $50,000 to $100,000 per year, the provision to take effect with the beginning of the next Presidential term. THE TRADES UNIONIST is pleased to second the motion of Mr. BRISTOW, and is not in sympathy with those who oppose the "raise" on the ground that plenty of men would be willing to take the job at half the salary.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Once or twice in the recent past I have suggested that Columbia Union should furnish a room at the Printers' Home, but I do not feel at all like insisting upon it if it is true that the "Childs memorial parlors," the "Mrs. A. J. Drexel memorial parlors," the "Henry Ledyard room," the "Jefferson Davis room," the "San Francisco room," the "St. Louis room," the "Inter Ocean room," the "Chicago room," etc., are kept merely for show purposes, while the inmates are crowded, as a picture of "one of the dormitories" shows, four or five in a room. The Printers' Home is a magnificent charity; one of the grandest ever devised for the alleviation of human suffering and distress. Let us keep it as such, making it in all respects a comfortable home for those whose misfortunes, infirmities and poverty compel them to seek an asylum in it. For exhibition purposes let us show how comfortably housed and pleasantly situated its inmates are, and not take up needed space merely to display handsome furnishings. Any one of the "parlors" mentioned would be as great a monument to the benefactor who furnished it if its comforts were enjoyed by some unfortunate whose extremity causes him to need our aid. If we ever furnish a room let it be understood that it is to be used for the benefit and not the inconveniencing of our helpless ones.

The death of Mr. Collins was announced about 10:30 o'clock on Sunday night, and at the suggestion of the foreman of printing those members of the night forces who were on duty ceased work and remained silent for ten or fifteen minutes in respect to the passing of the soul of the chief clerk. The funeral was one of the largest ever seen in Washington not national in character, the streets adjoining St. Mark's Church being crowded by many hundreds more than could gain admission. There were several wagonloads of flowers, completely filling the space around the pulpit. The mournful procession that followed the remains to Rock Creek cemetery was very long and composed of friends in all walks of life. All these things attested the high esteem in which Mr. Collins was held.

Several persons have asked me what the differences are between Dud Fleming and myself, reminding me that it is always dangerous to attempt a joke with certain people. They either take you as in earnest or they misapply the joke. I never for a moment believed that Dud wrote the items about his own red necktie.

* * * *

By the death of "Granny" Harford last week Columbia Union lost one of its landmarks, for he has been a conspicuous figure—not as a talker, but as a worker, at times filling minor positions—as long as I can remember. He was of the age of "Old Bill" Jones, Jabez Lord, Jesse Campbell, H. H. McKeever, P. Albert Caton, L. H. Jullien, John Melson, Frank Darley, Charlie O'Neill, Frank McGill, Bill Meade, "Dobbins" Robbins, Bill Whitcomb, John Law, et al., now all passed away.

* * * *

Several times friends of mine have suggested that they could furnish me reminiscences, etc., but that they didn't want to encroach on my space. Bring 'em in, boys; my space is always at your disposal. But you must tell your stories yourselves; a second-hand story is a poor substitute for the real thing.

* * * *

A member of Congress related a story not long ago in a speech about "Icicle Ike, of Coldfoot, Alaska," which set me to wondering if "Coldfoot" could be C. Percy Rhodes' first name and "Ichthyophagous" I. Walter Sharp's. It may be; you can't tell.

* * * *

I am told that Lawyer Chas. T. Hendler, formerly foreman of the State Branch and later a proofreader in the Day Proof Room, delivered a corking good speech at the banquet of the G. P. O. Council, National Union, last Saturday night, fairly surprising even those who were aware of his ability. Mr. Hendler graduated in law a year or two ago and is building up quite a comfortable practice, having realized that to do so he must kick away all props and stand on his own footing. I am glad to chronicle him as another successful printer professional.

A well attended meeting of the Ex-Delegates' Association was held last Sunday afternoon at Typographical Temple, W. R. Ramsey, president; J. M. Kreiter as secretary, and C. W. Otis, treasurer. The several committees reported and the committee on entertainment was authorized to go ahead and make all arrangements for Ex-Delegates' Day at the convention. Quite a number are yet in arrears for dues, I am sorry to say, and Secretary J. T. Herbert, of the Post, is just as willing as he can be to accept and receipt for dues. By the way, in addition to several ex-delegate pressmen, there are a number of stereotypers and electrotypers who are eligible to membership, and we will be glad to have them. Apply to J. T. Herbert, Post, personally or by letter.

"That reminds me," said Jim Platt, on our way home, "of that time when 'Omaha' Bleakmore came here—the time when he was so hard up."

"That's the way he always came," said "Biz."

"Well, this time he must have looked hard up," said Jim, "for as he was standing on the curb on Pennsylvania avenue a man drove up in a buggy and asked him to hold his horse. In a minute or two the driver came back, took his horse, and gave 'Omaha' a dime. He was both hungry and thirsty and he didn't know which to spend it for.

"'I'll toss it up,' said he; 'heads, something to eat; tails, a drink.'

"He tossed it and it came heads.

"'Hold on there!" said 'Omaha.' 'Best two out of three, you know,' and he tossed it again. This time it rolled down the sewer and he didn't get either."

On Thursday of last week Charles A. Morgan, of the Night Proof Room, lost his mother by death, at the advanced age of 78 years. Mr. Morgan took her remains to their old home, Quincy, Ill., for interment.

* * * *

Another good friend of the G. P. O. who goes out of Congress with this session is Hon. Thomas C. McRae, of Arkansas. He was on the conference committee on the wages-increase item three years ago and upheld the advance. He will probably receive new honors in a different line, and later come back to the legislative halls with a different title.

* * * *

The promotions incident to the death of Chief Clerk Collins seem to meet with general approval and none of them were very great surprises. The Times' recent story of the contemplated retirement of Public Printer Palmer does not find much credence, possibly largely from the fact that that paper has indulged in several such prophecies at various times. The probabilities are that if it keeps up its predictions it will some time hit it.

* * * *

The statement in last week's paper that W. J. Simmons was one of the pallbearers at Mr. Collins' funeral was wrong. H. Clay Espey, the foreman of the Library bindery, being the sixth. As I was to blame for the misstatement it is up to me to correct it.

* * * *

There is an anxious scanning of the legislative sky for signs of an extra session of Congress, and notwithstanding that an extra session is always predicted during the short session, to me it looks as though one will be necessary this year. None of the great measures have been enacted so far, and there are but four weeks left of the session. It will be a godsend to the many temporaries in the G. P. O. if there shall be one.

"Did you ever know Spot and George Morgan in the West?" asked John A. Onyun one night.

"The misfortune was mine; I did not," I answered.

"Well, they were old rounders and traveled all over. Twin brothers, and nobody could tell 'em apart, except that Spot had a little spot beside his nose. Spot used to booze the most, though both were very good at it. If one of 'em was put on—they were always subs—he could work a day or two and then put the other one on and nobody would knew the difference. The foreman fired Spot one night and the next night, finding George at work it was hard to convince him that he was not the man he had fired. If George got a hang-up anywhere, Spot would drop in and increase his bill for him. George occasionally delivered temperance lectures and sometimes accumulated a pretty fair stake at it, and then he would come around and blow in the proceeds with the boys. When Spot had a girl, George would palm himself off on her for Spot, and he broke him up by it two or three times. I believe Spot finally died, and I don't know what became of George."

Charlie Morgan, of the Night Proof Room, having some trouble with his stomach, resolved a couple of weeks ago to starve it out, and for ten days he went entirely without food without feeling any bad effects except a loss of about 14 pounds in weight. He might have continued the experiment longer, but a domestic affliction caused him to change his course. Some advocate fasting one day in four for stomach troubles. There seems to be some beneficial effects from giving the stomach a complete rest.

Has our friend "Adam Bugg" corked up entirely—mizzled, gone out of business, or what? Rudyard Kipling will get ahead of him with his "The Rowers" if Adam doesn't let something loose pretty soon. Johnny Ottinger want to know "If Adam were to start a hotel would he call it the Bugg House?"

LONG PRIMER SORTS.

Speaking of pipe dreams, how about Old Prog's statement that Mr. Davidson wore an apron a whole week without discovering that the pocket contained a dollar bill, put there by a former wearer?

Quite a stir has been caused in the literary world by the rumor that the Second Division correspondent will shortly establish a Bureau of Guaranteed Quotations.

Adam Bugg had a severe cold recently, as a result of which he relieved himself of the following couplet:

'Twas the day after pay-day, and
All through the shop,
There was silence so deep you
Could hear a cough drop.

Mr. A. F. Bloomer had a characteristic and well-written article on ghosts in the Post recently, which may be the reason why he has done more than his accustomed amount of literary knocking recently.

Can it be that the delegatorial aspirants are waiting for the office to seek the man—or has Mr. Bloomer's omnibus-nomination paragraph queered the game?

It is a pleasure to note that Cycle has not yet broken away from the bouquet habit.

Although the Kaiser's subjects may
Their duty sometimes shun
When 'tis his pleasure, getting gay,
Some weaker power to dun;
Yet still they have their part to play
In his melange of fun:
While he is gunning for the pay,
They're paying for the gun.

All those concerned in the Fourth Yearbook of Columbia Union seem to be proud of the fact. And considering the exceptional excellence of their work, they are not to be blamed for indulging in a personally conducted bouquet-throwing exhibition.

It would be interesting to see a list of the "Tommy Bashes" who shrank from the poet's touch in last week's TRADES UNIONIST.

Franklin Rogers, well and favorably known in the Government Printing Office, being employed in the Record's Clerks Division of said institution, is lying very ill at his home on Brightwood avenue.

The next time a certain lodge meets, John Weidman should see that the gas bill is paid and thus prevent the lodge from holding their meetings by candle light. This is only a tip. The degrees can be worked better by gas than candle light.

Miss McIntyre, who took the part of the Princess Beauty in the "Sleeping Beauty and the Beast" show, and Mr. John Hyams who took the part of the Doctor, a former Trojan, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Sheldon on Sunday last.

It is reported upon reliable authority that merchants are fast withdrawing their advertising patronage from the rat Los Angeles Times. Others will do so as fast as their contracts expire. This is as it should be, thereby teaching lessons to arbitrary powers that union workingmen have some rights that must be respected.

Representative Sulzer, of New York, on Tuesday introduced a joint resolution providing for an appropriation of $10,000 for the purchase of a site and to erect thereon a pedestal for a bronze statue of Amos Cummings. It is understood that the statue will be donated by Typygraphical Union and other societies to which Mr. Cummings had consecrated some of his best life work.

Second Division.

Parshall has returned to the proof press.

Saltzman has returned to his position on the bank.

W. D. Morgan has been on the sick list several days.

Quite a number of the members of our chapel have been sick recently.

Ed. Hall entertained a number of his friends Monday night, and among them was the new foreman of printing.

The rumor in one of the evening papers to the effect that the public printer intended resigning soon proved to be untrue.

It is possible that Mercer thought death preferable to leading a forlorn hope as manager of the tailenders—the Detroit baseball team.

Thos. A. Fitzgerald, who has been confined to his home during the last week, on account of rheumatism, returned to work Monday.

By the appointment of the son of the late chief clerk to fill the vacancy caused by the promotion of Mr. Ricketts, Mr. Palmer has again shown his good judgment of the eternal fitness of things, and at the same time lessened somewhat, at least, the bereavement of his (Mr. Collins') family. Mr. Collins, jr. has been an employee of the office for some years, and his experience will be of service to him in his new position. Success to him, and may he prove equal to any emergency.

It seems to be the opinion of all that the public printer exercised good judgment in filling the vacancy caused by the death of the late chief clerk. Captain Brian, who has served in an official capacity in this office for 20 years, or more, is eminently fitted by experience and ability to fill any position in the office, and his many friends will be glad to hear of this recognition of his distinguished services and well deserved promotion. Surely he has a record of which any man has just cause to be proud.

The new foreman of printing, Mr. Oscar Ricketts, who has been closely associated with the public printer for the past eight years, or more, being a practical printer and having worked in the office for a number of years, is thoroughly competent to fill the position to which he has been promoted. Mr. Ricketts is kind, polite, diplomatic and courteous to all. Few men have made more rapid steps up the ladder of fame in their calling than he, for only a few years ago he worked at the case, and to-day he is foreman of printing of the largest establishment of the kind in the world, and he and his many friends have cause to be somewhat elated over his rapid and deserved success.

It is better late than never, so they say, and so after waiting with abated breath, so to speak, for some months, we were all presented with a copy of our Yearbook on the 24th. From what we had seen and heard about the book we expected it to be a gem, but we confess it far surpassed our most sanguine expectations, and certainly reflects credit upon all connected with its make up, both mechanical and otherwise. Too much praise cannot be given to the efficient chairman of the Committee on Printing, Mr. Thomas Bynum, for his untiring efforts in making the book a success in every respect. The publishers also deserve praise for the book is certainly a credit to them.

It does seem to the casual observer that the vice-president of the City and Suburban Railway, who was at one time an employee of this office, would at least make an effort to give the employees of this department, who contribute more to the support of the H street car line than any other class of people in the city, decent car service, and not compel them to ride in inferior "one-horse" cars crowded to suffocation, not to speak of having to stand out in the rain for from 15 to 20 minutes waiting for a car. There should be at least 3 or 4 cars waiting at the office at 4:30 p. m. every day for our accommodation. Why don't the employees get up a petition requesting decent car service?

THE TRADES UNIONIST truly deserves all the "complimentary expressions that have been showered upon it on the production of the Union's Fourth Yearbook," which is indeed a fine specimen of artistic workmanship—a marvel of beauty—and reflects great credit upon all who have aided in the effort, especial honor being due to our co-worker Thomas A. Bynum, who labored so assiduously to make the work pleasing to advertising patrons and members of the Union.

It is estimated that William Ashley (sprinter), by his numerous daily peregrinations between the "Y" and the Proof Room, in the course of a year, accomplishes as many miles on foot as Charles O'Neill does by rail between Washington and the suburban city of Baltimore. Mr. A. is proud of the fact that, prior to his emigration to the Capital City, he always resided in the Empire State, where during the war of the 60's he served the country by ridding it of one of its enemies, for which service he thinks he deserves a pension.

William F. Reed's reputation as a coal getter during the recent fuel famine has secured him an appointment on the "National Coal Getters' Committee." It appears from the Philadelphia Press's brief sketch of his life (accompanied by his picture) that he is a native and legal resident of that part of the big Pennsylvania town that extends over into New Jersey, to which State the selection is credited. We are proud of the honor thus conferred upon one of our deserving fellow-employes, who will nevermore be known as "common Bill."

Among proof-room artists of noble lineage not the least is Copyholder Samuel D. Howells, of sturdy Welsh descent. His paternal ancestor, in ante bellum days, was a noted Ohio publisher, who, together with his sons, by means of various newspaper ventures which did not always prove successes, waged unrelenting war on the horrid institution of human slavery and its attendant evils. The discipline of those troublous times had much to do with the development of the wonderful literary genius of his brother—William Dean Howells—the greatest magazine writer of the age.

War Branch.

A few months ago there was unearthed in this division an ancient photograph. It was taken in 1867 and represented the force that occupied the building in that year. There was nothing particularly noticeable about the picture except that printers were handsome then, as now. The style of dress was also a matter of note—low turn-down collars, string ties, velvet vests, and 18-karat chains. The building was then used as a printing office attached to some bureau of the War Department. Like most old edifices it has an interesting history. The War Division is located a little northeast of Columbus, Ga. Previous to being occupied by the Government the building was owned by a gentleman of the name of Speiden, who went South when the war broke out and the authorities confiscated the same, afterward paying him $60,000 for it that we might have a good, comfortable house to work in. To choke off all posthumous talk as to the value of the above testimony, I will here state that that is the way it was told to me. It keeps me busy to tell these things without having to verify them. A few years ago—or about the time Bob Youart embraced Christianity—an elderly gentleman visited this division to look it over, saying that fifty years before he was married, first floor, front, on the very spot where Tibbitts now reads my takes in vain for errors.

But speaking of Columbus, I am reminded that it is an important manufacturing city on the Chattahoochee River. It is famous for the mental and physical superiority of the people who work in the mills. In fact for a person to apply to one of those hives of industry for employment is prima facie evidence that he is gifted in the liberal arts and sciences; that Scipio is an old friend, and he leads the life simply because he is fond of work. If you don't believe it, ask Dan Vaughan. About one hundred and fifty miles south of Columbus the writer was born, and by a singular coincidence this important historical event transpired in the same year that the photograph above mentioned was taken. And this thought brings rushing to memory the things that have happened since then, for life—always serious—brings sun shine to some and shadows for most of us. So I pause for a reverie that is halcyon in the distance, in the hope that what has been written may afford a passing moment; and if perchance the story seems distort, may the patient reader charge it up to poetic license.

Meeting of Hod Carriers' Union.

Hod Carriers, Brick and Mortar Wheelers' Union, No. 9468, held an open meeting recently, at Armory Hall, 708 O street northwest, at which ways and means were considered to more thoroughly organize the hod carriers of the city and secure the support of the building trades in having members of their organization employed on all buildings constructed by union workmen.

Moses Peyton, president of the union, after stating the purpose of the gathering, placed the meeting in charge of John Hamerstrom, president of the Central Labor Union. Speeches were delivered by Messrs. E. J. Ratigan, H. W. Sherman, Milford Spohn, and Henry E. Baker, and a recitation of original poems by Miss Alice Hallowell, known as the "author, reader, and sunshine poetess."

A letter was read addressed by John Mitchell to Miss Hallowell expressing the hope that the meeting of the hod carriers would be most enjoyable in every respect, and extended to the members of the organization his best wishes for their success.

The hod carriers were organized in 1881, and were generally recognized by the employers, who paid the wage scale of 25 cents per hour. These conditions continued until 1894, when the method of wheeling brick and mortar to the bricklayer was introduced, and a number of employers refused to pay the scale for wheeling, contending that the work is not hod carrying. As a result of this contention the hod carriers several years ago changed the title of their organization, and included the wheeling of brick and mortar as hod carriers' work at the rate of 25 cents per hour, with the qualification that the rule should only apply in such cases where the material is delivered in barrows direct to the bricklayers and in the preparation of the mortar.

O'Brien-Flynn.

On February 11, at 9:30 a. m., one of the prettiest weddings held in a number of years was that of Miss Mamie Flynn to Mr. P. A. O'Brien in St. Aloysius Church.

Miss Flynn has been employed for a number of years in the bindery of the Government Printing Office, and was a Sunday-school teacher in the church where she was married.

Promptly on time as the grand old organ pealed forth the wedding march, the groom appeared at the door and escorted his charming bride to the altar, where, with the assistance of three clergymen, they were made husband and wife. During the ceremony the organist played, "Of All Those Endearing Charms."

After the ceremony they returned to their home where, with a number of their friends, they enjoyed a wedding breakfast, after which they departed for Philadelphia to spend their honeymoon.

The bride was richly gowned in blue vaile over taffeta silk, with white chiffon and applique trimmings; she wore a white picture hat and carried a bouquet of bride's roses.

Specification Notes.

THE PRINTER MAN'S LAMENT.

[Dedicated to Charley Peake and "Funny" Roberts.]

Please, Mr. Palmer, if you have time,
Listen to my tale of woe!
I've been sent to the "Spess" on slug 99,
Listen to my tale of woe!

The work is so hard that I'll surely have to quit,
If you can't provide me with a better "sit;"
Listen to my tale of woe!

I thought I was a printer until I struck this place,
But my proofs here surely are a disgrace;
Listen to my tale of woe!

The style here is so very complex
That to set forty-eight surely would vex
Old Ben Franklin and Guttenberg, too,
And it is no wonder these people are all blue;
Listen to my tale of woe!

They have terms up here of which I've never heard,
And ten and twelve syllables in one word;
Listen to my tale of woe!

Four dollars per is pretty good pay,
But I give it to you straight that I'm no jay;
And I know the bug-house will be my fate,
Unless I get a transfer at an early date;
Listen to my tale of woe!

These proof-room fiends they seem to take delight
In trying to demonstrate that I am never right,
And a "ring" on my proof is never made,
But commas in and out are constantly displayed;
Listen to my tale of woe!

And now they say that after I came,
Sharpening pencils made them all lame,
And they got a machine to do that work,
And if that's true, then I'm a Turk;
Listen to my tale of woe!

Jim Groshon finds that rural life has many things to charm,
His kidlets and his bull dog, too, they thrive upon the farm;
And the ozone in the morning, as he rides in on the cars,
Invigorates his system, that has suffered from the jars
And cares of city life, not the least of which to him
Have been the calls of creditors, who with vigor and with vim
Have haunted him both day and night, at workshop and at home,
Until he dreaded pay-day as prisoners dread to be alone.
But since living in the country all things have changed to him,
And he looks full ten years younger, and once more is "Sunny Jim."

Printer girls, too? Sure we have 'em, from all parts of this broad land;
And they hustle up the type, too, deft they are of brain and hand.
Some of them come from Southland, some from East, and some from West;
Give to me the one from Boston, and I care not for the rest.

—E. E. SHOTT.

Cold champagne is very pleasant, served on ice with a hot bird,
Other wines and beer and whisky have their good points, too, I've heard,
But for me, when I am thirsty, be the weather cold or hot,
Give me tea that's brewed from hyson, brewed in 'Mandy's new tea pot.

The Spess force were all busy, digging type for all their worth,
For to get up forty-eight here is the hardest work on earth;
And you have to set your average, be you well or be you ill,
Or you'll get your little notice that you do not fill the bill;
When a voice from South Dakota rang out clear upon the breeze,
These glad tidings to her shopmates, "Forty-nine, no run down, please!"

Frank Munsey is having color attachments added to his press, and the Times will soon be a full-fledged "yellow."

The rumor that the Spess Division is to occupy the old Document Room appears to be correct, but Fire Marshal Croninger has not yet approved it.

John D. Wood, the pressman who fell and broke both legs on Christmas, is still at Emergency Hospital, and it may be some weeks yet before he is able to be about.

George Nichols, in commenting on the sale and suspension of the Philadelphia Times recently, said the Times never did make money more than enough to pay Billy Heck's salary.

Darby has started an office at Atlanta to do the Southern Railroad work, and he says that the Atlanta Union not only whitewashed several of his rodents, but made concessions in their scale of prices to accommodate him.

The Ex-Delegates' Association has quite a bunch of members employed in the Specification Division, including Capt. W. R. Ramsey, 1873; D. W. Beach, 1876; Maj. W. A. Dodge, 1882; Maj. G. Harry Stone, 1864-'90; W. W. Maloney, 1877; Martin Schram, 1882; D. J. McCarthy, 1886; O. S. Miller, 1886; E. N. Kerrott, 1877; George M. Ramsey, 1885-'86-'87, and several who would like to be.

According to a table, recently published, of the ten papers which printed over 20,000 columns of advertising in 1902, the New York Herald leads, with the Chicago Tribune second, and our own Evening Star is well up among the number. Taking into consideration the fact that the Star is only a six day paper, it is a question whether she is not entitled to be the leading paper in respect to advertising.

According to the papers the Treasury Department requires the room now occupied by the Treasury Branch printing office for some other purpose, and the Branch is to be discontinued or greatly diminished in size. I believe the day is not far distant when all the branches will be housed under one roof out in Swampoodle, and there is no good reason why they should not be. It may result in doing away with a few sinecures, but the general result will be beneficial.

The members of the local Typothetae have raised prices fully 25 per cent. One of them told me they found it necessary—high price of coal, I presume. No doubt, much printing is done at too small a figure, but how the "Teapots" are going to compete with Baltimore, at an increase of 25 per cent, when they claimed before that Baltimore was taking a great part of the work because of the higher rate of wages and shorter hours here, I'll have to get Rufus Darby to figure out.

Speaking of advertising, of the ten leading papers in that respect, very few of them lay claim to the largest circulation in the communities in which they are published. Neither the New York Herald nor the Chicago Tribune has anything like the circulation of other papers published in those cities, and yet they not only lead in the amount of space taken but their rates are much higher, and the Herald allows no commission to advertising agents whatever, which goes to show that it is not circulation always that counts.

A handsome thing for the Ex-Delegates' Association to do would be to extend a special invitation to all the living ex-Presidents of the I. T. U. to visit Washington during convention week. They are a fine lot of men and their presence would add greatly to the interest of the occasion. Ex-Congressman John M. Farquhar is the oldest, I believe; then comes John McVickar, of Detroit; Martin R. H. Witter, of St. Louis; Mark Crawford, of Chicago; William Aimison, of Nashville; W. B. Prescott, of Baltimore, and Samuel B. Donnelly, of New York.

While the election of officers of the I. T. U. by the referendum vote may be a good thing in many ways, it certainly has eliminated one of the most interesting features of a convention—one which gave a good deal of pleasure also to a number of constant attendants. Harvey Ellis got more sport out of that feature than any man who ever attended a convention, and when the law was changed he ceased to attend. At one of the conventions in the '80's Peoria, Ill., had a delegate who wanted an office and wanted it bad. Ellis advised him first to get a committee assignment, a chairmanship if possible, as the first stepping-stone, and told him that I was the party to see—that I was the power behind the throne, etc., and could get anything from the president. I tried to convince the fellow that I had nothing to do with such things, but he would not have it, and I had to listen forty times to all the reasons why he was entitled to recognition. When the committees were announced he came for me red-hot with a grievance that Fort Wayne, which was a 25-cent town, had been been recognized to the detriment of Peoria, which was a 30-cent town, and he was going to raise Cain, which he proceeded to do to everyone who would listen. The night before election—or morning, rather—a party of us entered the hotel rather late, and Peoria came for me and accused me of having been attending a caucus; said he had attended five that night, and as he had seen me at none of the five he knew there must have been a sixth, and when the result of the ballotting was announced the next day, he said he was convinced that I had attended a caucus of the winners.

I met a poor fellow on the street one day recently whom I had not seen for years, who was well known about the newspaper offices here some years ago through being one of the agents of the Louisiana lottery, when that institution was in the most flourishing period of its existence. Drummond (which is not his name, but is not so far from it) is broken in health and looks as if he and a square meal don't connect with astonishing regularity. He once hit the Louisiana octopus for quite a bunch of money ($15,000 it was said at the time), and like most men of the sporty persuasion, convinced himself that he was just the kind of a man to run a swell booze emporium, and looked around for a location. A prominent newspaper proprietor had vacant quarters just in the right part of the city and Drummond leased two store rooms on a prominent street and fitted them up in gorgeous fashion, one as a barroom and the other as a billiard and pool room, and the "grand opening" was something on the order of the great event in Boston that the bean-eaters still boast of—John L. Sullivan's "opening." The venture was not a success financially, and one day the owner walked in and said: "Drummond, I see that you don't have much use for that billiard room, and as I can now use it to advantage I will take it off your hands, which will lessen your expenses considerably." Drummond jumped at the magnanimous offer and vacated forthwith. A very short while thereafter he was waited on by a representative of his landlord with a peremptory notice to vacate the other room as the owner had other use for it, and was informed, in answer to his claim that he had a lease on the premises, that his lease called for two rooms and when he vacated the other room he gave up all claim for a lease. It was a piece of very sharp practice and doubtless Drummond could have won out had he gone to law, but he was weak and ignorant, and he sacrificed all he had put in there and quit the business. He would have lost all he had anyway had he continued there, perhaps a little sooner than he eventually did, so Old Money Bags didn't really do him such a bad turn in that way, but I wonder, when he sees the poor fellow hobbling around that locality, almost blind and scarcely able to navigate, if he chuckles over the deal as he did at the time he accomplished it.

Bindery Notes.

There were many expressions of regret among the chain gang Monday morning. The wrong man had been asphyxiated.

"Cap" Toomey has added another to the many titles he has won on fields of peace and war. He is now "Inspector of Rounding."

Al. Eshelman has such difficulty in keeping track of his apron that he has had his name painted on it. If this proves unavailing he intends to paste his photo on it—surely, no one will take it then.

At a meeting of the Casers' Union, held February 9, 1903, it was unanimously decided to boycott "Cap" White, by not having anything to do with him except on strictly office business. His having patronized a non-union barber shop, and there being no clause in the constitution of the Bookbinders' Union covering the case, was the cause of the action taken.

Some of the Baltimore binders attended a ball of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Baltimore Bookbinders' Union the other night and each of them, according to the story they bring back, were looking for something. Bauer was looking for a pretty girl to compare with his Washington flame; Wilson Clark was looking for an awning pole; Kelly, for a cash register, and Childs, for an empty violin case.

Johnny Burns has had another experience. He takes his lunch, sometimes, in the neighborhood of the office and the other day he asked the colored attendant, in an undertone, to furnish him with another portion of macaroni. The colored gentleman in question indignantly refused, and in tones loud enough to be heard by all in the room, distinctly informed Johnny that he would not be worked for two portions by anybody. The next day Johnny tried to square himself by pretending he had intended to pay for the second portion, but the colored man would not believe him.

Comrade Cunningham, of the Press Room, who has many friends among the binders, has a favorite tune, "The Good Old Summer Time." Recently, while "Cunny" was in a nearby saloon, an Italian harpist wandered in, and Comrade immediately asked him to play his favorite air. The Signor did not know it so Quinlan whistled a few bars to give the harpist some idea of it, which the latter got with a vengeance. Comrade was greatly pleased and commended the Dago's smartness. Quinlan winked at the crowd while "Cunny" danced around to their great edification. "Cunny" has not yet awakened to the fact that the tune was "Sunday Afternoon."

It is to be hoped that the contemplated high-moral New York newspaper will go slow at first in its attempt to reform the news-seeking public. A sudden change from the Daily Yellow to the Daily Parkhurst might prove fatal.

There are undoubtedly too many workingmen who fail to realize thoroughly the social and ethical as well as the material value of the organizations to which they belong. They are as apt as not to claim that conditions would be about the same, union or no union. They begrudge the payment of necessary dues and generally take a more or less cynical and narrow view of all attempts at advancement. That this class are a thrifty lot it is hardly necessary to state, and they seem to have a sort of bucolic idea that the high wages they receive, whether in the G. P. O. or elsewhere, are the result of their own immediate Heaven-directed efforts. It is true that the number of this sort of unionists is comparatively small. But they ar generally men of considerable intelligence and some force of character, and it is therefore unfortunate that they can not be made to see the error of their ways. So far as Columbia Union is concerned, a campaign of education by means of lectures and public discussions might not be such a bad idea in this connection. But then of course this is an old story, and we'll have to let it go at that.

Is there no law to reach ROCKEFELLER as a bomb thrower?

THE events of the past week have added another to the Standard jokes at the Capitol.

WELCOME, Mr. CORTELYOU, Secretary of the new Department of Commerce and Labor.

THERE is little field for belief that the LITTLEFIELD trust-buster will live to reach the stage of long pants.

GROVER CLEVELAND has gone to Florida to try his luck at fishing. What he is fishing for is not known, except by conjecture.

EDITOR BRYAN, of the Commoner, is reported as having refused to banquet with the Princeton sage. Perhaps he smelled the "crow" a-cooking.

THE operators of the bituminous coal mines have agreed to an advance of fifteen per cent to the miners, but have given notice that the public must foot the bills.

AN earthquake visited portions of Missouri, Kentucky, and Southern Illinois on Sunday evening last. An earthquake is among the list of things that Washington does not want.

CONGRESS has refused to loan the District of Columbia $10,000,000 and charge the amount up to posterity. The refusal is a terrible shock to those whose fingers were waxed for "a good thing."

A BURGLAR entered the residence of a local minister on Sunday evening, but succeeded in securing only two cents as booty. It is evident from this that the fellow has little knowledge of preachers in general.

THIS is the ninety fourth birthday anniversary of ABRAHAM LINCOLN. In speaking of capital and labor Mr. LINCOLN once said : "Capital is only the fruit of labor and never could exist if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the higher consideration."

THE House on Saturday last unanimously passed the LITTLEFIELD anti-trust bill, and it has been sent to the Senate to there meet the ELKINS measure of similar import; and now the legislative incubator is expected to hatch out something with features resembling both authors. The operation is both difficult and delicate and occasions no little anxiety.

A STRIKE of considerable magnitude by the trolley men at Bridgeport, Conn., has been in progress for several days, and the numbers in sympathy though not directly affected are being daily augmented. A pastor of one of the most aristocratic churches of the city, referring to the strike in his sermon on Sunday told his congregation of wealthy citizens that the case of the strikers was just and that the trolley men ought to be paid even more than they demand.

QUITE a flutter was occasioned by the report that a telegram had been received here by several Senators, bearing the signature of J. D. ROCKEFELLER, calling a halt on certain proposed anti-trust legislation. The report lost considerable force when it was explained by one of the Senators that such a proceeding would be unnecessary, as the Senate is thoroughly aware of the kind of legislation Mr. ROCKEFELLER and other magnates most desire.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

A friend sends me a copy of the Rules and Regulations of the Union Printers' Home, with criticisms of certain clauses. Among the regulations commented on is the following:

9. No malt or spirituous liquors will be furnished at the Home. Any resident thereof entering the institution in an intoxicated condition or bringing thereinto liquor of any character shall be punished as follows: * * * The superintendent shall be the judge as to intoxication and other violations of this rule.

A little reflection will convince him, I am sure, that stringent regulations against intoxication are necessary.

Persons admitted into this Home shall be fed on plain but wholesome food, clothed with plain but decent apparel, and lodged in a plain but safe manner—

he construes that the inmates wear a uniform, which I am sure is an erroneous construction.

* * * Should it happen that any person admitted to this Home shall, from misconduct, have become unfit to remain, * * * such person shall be discharged therefrom.

* * * If an inmate proves obnoxious and persists in his conduct, he shall be discharged.

These two clauses are marked for my comment, but I do not see how any discipline could be maintained without them or similar ones, unless the Superintendent is given power to use buck and gag, dungeon, bread and water diet, or other forcible measures.

This he characterizes as "dangerous:"

9. Members holding certificates of admission to the Home must be examined by the Home physician as early as practicable after arrival at Colorado Springs. Should it develop on such medical examination that a false or incorrect representation of the case has been made by the indorsing union or examining physician in the application filed with the admission committee, the member shall be returned to the indorsing union at the expense of the latter.

This seems to me, however, necessary to protection against possible fraud or misrepresentation, and its absence would be dangerous to proper management.

Other clauses that meet my friend's disapprobation are:

3. * * * All rooms under the care of Home residents must be placed in order before 9 o'clock a. m.

6. The following practices are prohibited: * * * (5) reading by artificial light in rooms or in bed.

Residents are required, when able, to assist in keeping the building and grounds in order, and to perform such other duties as may appear proper to the Superintendent, subject to the judgment of the attending physician.

I know my friend is honest and in earnest in his criticism of these regulations, but I am afraid that he fails to consider the class for whom this Home maintained, many of whom are diseased, querulous, petulant old men, who need rigid repression for their own good; that in requiring light duties of those who are able is not only a favor to many of them, as a distraction from their troubles and a pastime, but is necessary in the economy of the institution, which is not richly endowed, but is supported out of the wages of workingmen; that certain safeguards are necessary with irresponsible persons; that fraud and deceit must be guarded against; and that as a whole the regulations are less rigid than those of any other charitable institution. All the inmates with whom I have ever conversed speak in the highest praise of the Home in every respect and I never yet heard one complain of the intolerance or discomfort of the rules and regulations.

Mrs. E. S. Wild, wife of our "Pucky," has set to music one of "Cos" Rodier's poems, and it will shortly be published by John F. Ellis & Co. Mrs. Wild is a very capable musician and has composed a number of successful pieces of music, and we all know Rodier is an able poet; in fact, several of his poems are gems and all show strength and the true poetic fire. I think sometimes that I like them as well as some of my own, and you know that is a large admission to make.

Joseph W. McCann, old-time swift, of Specifications, has invented a device for holding pages of type, to take the place of the time-honored page cord, which looks feasible to me. It is made of metal and is locked in the form with the type, and as there is no particular wear on it, it ought to last forever. A number of useful inventions have originated in the fertile brain of McCann, who has quite a mechanical turn of mind, as Denny Moynihan once observed. Do you need a diagram?

There is a proposition on foot to have the projected statue of the late Hon. Amos J. Cummings placed in the Pension Office grounds, facing the Typographical Temple. This would be peculiarly appropriate and illustrative of his life history. He always gave his countenance to the Typographical Union, and he always turned his back on the Pension Office, so far as his personal claims were concerned, though ever at hand to assist his brother soldiers to get pensions.

In the old time there were three "Shorties" whom I met in my travels, of whom I have not heard a word in thirty years—"Shorty" Rice, "Shorty" Matthews and "Shorty" Sanford. Do any of the superfluously lagging veterans know them? Fred Still is another name that occurs to me. I knew him in Springfield and Boston, Mass.

In petitions from churches and other religious institutions constant wails come to Congress for a constitutional amendment forbidding polygamy and for legislation providing for uniform divorce laws among the States. Why there should be so much worry about polygamy I can't understand. The American people are not polygamists and would not be if there were no laws against it. As to divorce, the cruelest, most senseless, indefensible law is the one which compels two persons to maintain relations that may have grown irksome and unbearable to them, as now in the District. No woman can really know a man before she marries him, nor can a man have more than a superficial knowledge of a woman until the close association of wedlock shall have revealed her true character. Why compel a pure-minded, white-souled woman to remain the victim of a drunkard, a libertine, a spendthrift, or a loafer, when she has discovered his true character and been made miserable by it? Why require a man to endure a scolding, complaining, fault finding, uncongenial woman, even if she has no worse faults, after the lapse of time has developed that no happiness can ever come from their union? With all the palaver that has been uttered as to the immorality of divorce, what specifications can any one make that immorality results? Who does not know divorced ones of both sexes whom a second marriage has made happy who had never known happiness in the first marriage? Who can show that a greater percentage of those divorced "go wrong" than of others? Marriage is an institution upon which civilization rests, and it is too sacred a relation to be required to be maintained by those to whom it is a burden, a bond with a body of death. Let us have divorces granted by upright judges in cases where nought but strife and misery can come of the maintenance of the marriage bonds.

Patent medicine advertisers work the country papers for all they are worth in the way of the greatest amount of space and the choicest positions for the smallest amount of money. I never knew but one paper which got even with these cormorants, and that was the one on which I served a portion of my apprenticeship. It was an eight-page paper, and a page of this class of "ads." was kept to slap on the press in place of one of the news pages until enough papers were printed to supply the advertisers, when it was taken off. Of course it was downright fraud, but it was only a case of "diamond cut diamond" or "dog eat dog." A rival paper "got onto" the fact and published it, but a few affidavits—cheap remedies, affidavits!—fixed it up all right, but spoiled the game.

* * * *

When I was "an apprentice boy"—why do people persist in saying "apprentice boy?" Doesn't "apprentice" cover the case as well? And wouldn't you naturally know the person spoken of wasn't an apprentice girl?—well, then, when I was an apprentice, I knew the print of every paper in the State of Kansas, and could have put the correct credit to an article or an item clipped from any of them merely by its looks. That was before the day of "patent outsides" and "insides," when every publisher printed all of his paper. Now I could not tell the print of a single one of the aforesaid papers, but could confidently expect to find the same identical article or item in each one of them, and printed from the same identical linotype slugs. O tempora, o mores!

* * * *

Jake Peffer used to run a paper at Coffeyville, Kans.—in fact, he responds as readily to "Coffeyville Jake" as Charlie Johnson does to "Peekskill Charlie"—and was there at the time the Dalton gang tried to rob the bank, but left a considerable number of their forces dead on the field. I have seen photographs of the man whose deadly Winchester rifle was popularly supposed to have produced the mortality, but those "on the inside" believe the man who really did the work was as willing to have another man pose as the hero as the other man was willing to have it so.

Did you ever steal watermelons when you were a boy? I did—once. In a little town in Kansas a party of us took a two-horse wagon and went about five miles "into the country," where one of them had located a fine "melon patch," and we loaded up with them. We were scarcely loaded when the mean-spirited owner heard us and gave chase for two or three miles over the prairie. We got away all right and had plenty of melons the next day. But my boss threw a chill into me by saying:

"You've been stealing watermelons, and —— says he's going to have you arrested."

"How do you know?" came naturally.

"Because I heard him say he is going to send the sheriff after you," said he.

"Well, then, I guess I'm all right," said I, "for the sheriff's two boys were with me." Which was true.

I never heard any more about it. That fall one of the sheriff's boys and I located a bee tree while out hunting, and that night we went after it. We cut it down and as it fell it split open and laid bare about two bushels of honey, which we scooped in. The next day the owner of the land and tree tackled me:

"How much honey did you get out of that tree last night?"

"Oh, about a dozen bucketfuls," I answered.

"Why didn't you go after it in the daytime?" he asked. "I wouldn't have bothered you."

"You can't get no honey from no bees in the daytime 'less'n they won't sting you to death," said I. "Had to go at night. Won't you have some honey?"

He said no.

Alec M. Allison, according to a letter, is to leave Manila for some port in China as a member of a rifle team to compete for prizes, after which he will make a tour through the interior of China. AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

Union meeting Sunday.

Geo. E. Breitenbach, of Demopolis, Ala., arrived in the city this week.

It looks killing to see a full-grown man smoking a cigarette—and it is.

M. T. Hyer, of Eureka, Ill., arrived here this week and is located in the Government printery.

Matt Maloney, who has been confined at Providence Hospital with a severe case of pneumonia, is able to be around.

Foreman of Printing Ricketts was called to his home in Charleston, Ill., on account of the death of his father, this week.

William Hamilton, representing the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, of Watertown, N. Y., called upon us this week.

"Mother" Jones, of the United Mine Workers, will speak at Masonic Temple, Ninth and F streets northwest, Tuesday night, February 17.

Chief Clerk H. T. Brian, of the Government Printery, was called to Pennsylvania this week, on account of the death and burial of his sister.

Constantine E. LaVigne, of Grand Rapids, Mich., received an appointment in the printing service of the Government and reported for duty this week.

E. J. Arnold & Co., of St. Louis, Mo., and other points, race horse brokers, went up in smoke the other day. The sports in the G. P. O. contributed in the neighborhood of $10,000.

D. J. Hegarty, of the G. P. O., who has been absent from duty for some seven months on account of sickness, returned from a six weeks' trip to the Bermudas this week, and from appearances he has been restored to his former self.

Goodrich, N. Dak., is a town with a future. The Flickertail Flicker, the leading paper of the town, enumerates the following as the most pressing of Goodrich's immediate needs:

A large depot, better train service, a doctor, a dentist, a harness shop, a millinery shop, one more good hotel, and one more livery stable. And as soon as the weather gets warm, we will needs some more carpenters.

Fred L. Ames, who for the past five years has occupied the position of editor of The Chenango Telegraph, has resigned to accept a more lucrative one in the Government Printing Office at Washington, D. C. During his time with the Telegraph he has always proven himself an able journalist, and has largely been the means of building the paper up to where it was at the time it left the hands of Charles Berry. His departure from among us is one of much regret, not only by the printing fraternity but by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. Mr. Ames was the first President of Typographical Union, No. 453, and it was largely through his efforts that the printers secured a substantial increase in pay about six months ago. He secured his position in Washington through a civil service examination and is not indebted to any politician for it. May he always prosper is our sincere wish.—The Trades Unionist, Norwich, N. Y.

First Division.

Tim Ring and J. T. Ruddach are still on the sick list.

J. H. Babcock and J. C. Spencer have been transferred to the proof room.

Robt. H. Miller is back again after a severe spell of nervous prostration.

W. H. Bates and Frank J. Sloan received temporary appointments last week.

E. W. Morcock and J. E. Donellan have been transferred to the Night Bill Force.

George Johnson, jr., who has been off sick for the past three weeks returned to work last Monday.

The following gentlemen have received probationary appointments: J S. Gettman, E. R. Sprague, F. L Ames, W. N. Darden, and William B. Myers.

C. A. Honaker has gone to Honaker, Va., for the benefit of his health. Mr. Honaker has sent for his withdrawal card. His many friends hope it will not be long before he will be with us once more.

Capt. John J. King, father of our fellow-workman, J. Ligon King, died Sunday morning last in Waco, Texas. Captain King was a South Carolinian and quite an extensive rice planter before the war. He served in the Confederate cavalry service throughout the war. He leaves a widow and four children to mourn his loss.

F. F. Moore has bought out the law office of O. J. Jolly, of Rockwell City, Iowa, consisting of 700 or 800 books, office furniture, and a large safe. This is Mr. Moore's old county, where in 1894 he ran for register of deeds. The law office of Mr. Jolly has been established for 25 years. Mr. Moore received his master of law from the National University and his master of patents from the Columbia University of this city. He was admitted before Supreme Court of South Dakota in 1898. Mr. Moore contemplates leaving here in May and his many friends wish him all kinds of luck.

A very exciting bowling game took place last Monday night at the Rathskellar between teams representing the S.-G. Catalogue and the Correcting Alley. The "Korrectors" were composed of Messrs. Serrano, Bellinger, Martin, Henry, and Bentz, and the "Catalogues" were represented by Messrs. Nachman, McDonough, Miller, Siewers, and Mabrey. The game was very fast and furious and the good plays of the different players were applauded by the many friends of both teams that were in attendance to cheer on their favorites. Mr. S. B. Clark acted as scorer. The "Catalogues" won the match by winning two out of the three games played. The prize, a beautiful American flag, hangs in alley 19. The following is the score of the games:

CATALOGUE.	First game.	Sec'nd game.	Third game.	Total.

Proof-room Pencil Points.

George L. Jeffreys, who has for many months been suffering from the effects of a severe attack of typhoid pneumonia, visited the Proof room on Monday last and received the congratulations of his fellow-readers on his recovery.

A recent augmentation of the Proof-room force resulted in the return to a reader's desk of Joe Babcock, who is well known in our midst as an earnest union worker, an eloquent debater, and who at one time figured as the Proof-room's correspondent to THE TRADES UNIONIST.

The affable Howard E. Sherman is not lineally connected with the family of the late distinguished Union general and the politician and statesman of that name, nor does he even hail from the "great State of Ohio," but as he and civil and religious liberty were born and reared upon the same soil, he is not ashamed to "stand up" for the diminutive Province or State of Roger Williams—sometimes known as "Little Rhody."

Charles W. Otis, who, though he has labored at his profession in the States of Ohio and California, has spent the major portion of his life in the Capital City and in Uncle Samuel's big printing office as compositor and proof-reader, and who was in the early '90's honored by No. 101 with an election as delegate to the International body, has recently been the recipient of further honors in the Masonic order, as appears from the following item taken from the Evening Star of the 7th instant: "At a meeting of Columbia Royal Arch Chapter, No. 1, held Wednesday evening, February 4, Mr. Charles W. Otis was elected excellent high priest. Mr. Otis was made a master Mason in National Lodge, No. 12, May 13, 1892. His interest in Masonry and his capabilities soon attracted attention, and at the next election of officers, after he became a member, he was appointed senior steward. In this position, as instructor of candidates, he proved himself worthy of advancement, and at the next election he was elected senior warden. At the expiration of his term of service in that station he was promoted to the office of worshipful master. He has been a member of Columbia Chapter nearly the same length of time, having served in all the positions in the line of officers, from which he has now been exalted to the important position of high priest. He is regarded as a good worker, displaying excellent administrative qualities."

The Government Printing Office soldier organization held a most enjoyable musical and literary entertainment on the evening of January 17, at Maccabee Hall, Ninth street. The exercises consisted of brief remarks by President Robinson, songs and recitations, finely rendered selections by the Rebew Orchestra and the Panama Quartette, and a "sarmint" by the Rev. William Jersey Reed, P. R., who spoke in part, as follows: "My belubed comraders and zillary sistern: You will fin' my tex somewhar twixt de kivers of the Hagerstown Almanac, and it say, 'De trusts aint done clean gone busted.' De truf ob de tex is distinkly wisable to de unkivered obtics of a skewished people. De kloven hoof ob de trusts is on our necks. Dey is de Moses Iscariots ob dese regenerated days. Am I right? ["Dat you is," responded the Rebew Orchestra in unison.] Whar am I at? ["Trusts," shouted G. Wash Warren.] Trusts aint no good nohow—case dey don't trust; dey rob ebery mudder's son; dey He brew us [cheers from the orchestra]; dey pat us on de skull cranium wid a batterin' ram—say, you gemmen by de do' will please quit snickerin' and pay tickler 'tention to de burnin' eloquence ob de revend cullud speakah. To desume, I say, my dejected hearers, dat dese are troublesome times; as Spokeshave says, 'It is de midwinter time ob our discontent.' De luminaries ob de blue kote am in de direction ob de kole yahd, de ash pickins am werry po', and de hen house do' am padlocked, and all dese diresome doins under de indignant folds ob Old Glory. [Cheers, and Gen. W. Scott inquired why Old Glory was so called.] Bekase de stripes paled and den got red wid indignation at de trusts, which I consider de most greatest and exceedingest mightiest kalamity ob dis age. I am an eloquent orator, I acknowledge, but whar's de language to de extreme proposition ob de prodigiousness ob de magnitude ob de enormousness ob de universal ampletude ob de trust question. Yaas, my distressed comraders and zistern, de krisis hab come; de sisters ob de krisis and deir sisters hab arriv, and de earth quakes, de stars emit bolts ob indignant thunder, de werry universe trembles, and boundless immensity echoes back de"—[Prolonged cheering, at the conclusion of which the president announced that fresh refreshments would be served to the ladies and gentlemen present and to the grandiloquent speaker.

Vice-President Sherman Presides—The Post Office Clerks' Withdrawal Matter—The Hospital Attendants Want Shorter Hours, Leave, etc.—A Committee Appointed to Draft Resolutions on Death of President Gompers' Son—Theatres' Contracts.

The regular weekly meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order Monday night by Vice-President Sherman.

Minutes of previous meeting read and approved.

Credentials were received from R A. Lanis Association, No. 10, certifying Messrs. Edward King, E. J. Ratigan, and James Douglass; from Stone Laborers, No. 9013, certifying Edward Campbell; from Stereotypers' Union, No. 19, certifying Messrs. Frank Hursh, Joseph Splann, A. W. Clifford, A. M. Hurd, and J. M. Brown.

Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers, of Baltimore, communicated relative that all bodies demand label on canned goods. Filed.

New York Stereotypers' Union, No. 1, communicated stating that the Stickney & Poor Spice Co., J. W. Beardsley's Sons, manufacturers of beef, boneless herring, and shredded codfish; C. F. Muller & Co., egg noodles; Edwin J. Gillies, mustard and pepper, and Benzineated Soap Co. were having their labels printed by the unfair U. S. Printing Company, of Brooklyn, and requested this body and its members to write the above firms that they would be compelled to not patronize their products until they ceased patronizing the unfair U. S. Printing Company. Request granted.

A communication was received from President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, stating that the action of the Post Office Clerks in withdrawing from this body was contrary to the principles, policies, and practices of the American Federation of Labor, and stated that section 2, Article III, of the constitution would be brought to the attention of the secretary of said organization. Filed.

A communication from Leon Tobriner was placed on file; and the secretary was directed to publish statement that all breweries had signed contracts with the Central Labor Union.

The communication from Corset Cutters and Ironers, No. 9007, of Bridgeport, Conn., was referred to Retail Clerks' Union.

The communication from Theatrical Stage Alliance, complaining of the manager of Lafayette Theatre violating contract, was referred to the Contract Committee.

The Grievance Committee reported their inability to adjust differences between John S. Farrell, grocer, Second and G streets northeast, and the Grocery Clerks and recommended that the request of the Clerks that he be placed upon the unfair list be granted. Request granted.

Drug Clerks stated, in explanation of inquiry relative to a member of one local incroaching upon another local, that a member of Columbia Typographical Union was doing relief work in drug stores without compensation. The matter was referred to Columbia Typographical Union.

Journeymen Tailors reported that an attempt would be made to disrupt their local, and requested all union men to insist on having the union label on all custom-made clothing.

The Contract Committee reported that it was evident that the managers of the National and Columbia Theatres were violating their contracts, and recommended that the arbitration clause of the contract be resorted to. Recommendation concurred in and the secretary directed to so notify the managers.

The Building Trades Section reported that they had approved the contract of Mr. Chr. Heurich and requested that he be taken from the unfair list. Request granted.

Upon motion of Delegate Ratigan a committee was appointed to draft suitable resolutions of condolence on the recent death of the son of President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor. Messrs. Ratigan, Dickman, and Sprague were named as said committee.

A motion prevailed by which Delegates Adams, Dickman, and Sprague were appointed to place a construction upon and construe Article III, sections 1, 2, and 3, of the constitution of Allied Council of Building Trades of the Central Labor Union.

Next Monday being a legal holiday (Washington's birthday), the body adjourned to meet Monday, March 2, 1903.

To The Public.

The Central Labor Union desires to inform the public, through the medium of THE TRADES UNIONIST, that all the local breweries have signed contracts with this organization, all statements to the contrary notwithstanding; that the same have been faithfully carried out and most amicable relations exist between all parties to the contracts.

Present Remedies Inadequate.

Judge P. S. Grosscup, of the United States Circuit Court, Chicago, in his lecture before the University of Michigan on the 14th instant, on the subject of the "New Nation," declared that measures respecting the trusts and now receiving the attention of Congress are inadequate as they exhibit no purpose. These are his concluding words:

The people of the United States will, in time, come face to face with the full significance of the situation on which they are entering. Side issues that now obscure will then clear up, and sordid interests that now obstruct will be brushed aside, and it will be made plain that but for some far-reaching reconstruction of our corporate policy we are on our way either to socialism or to a form of government no longer republican. Then will come about a determined public will to set our house in order; to re-establish on the secure foundations of popular proprietorship and industrial liberty; to restore those ideals, into the depths of whose firmament the people of America have always looked, and look now, for lights to guide them on their courses.

A LITTLE OF ALL SORTS.

Col. Edward Mullery, of the Spess force, is again on duty, after a seven weeks' spell of sickness, as good natured and full of good stories as if he had never known an ache or pain.

I don't think it would be necessary to go more than a thousand miles from the Capitol to find the counterpart of the Evening Twink, so humorously described in "Pard" Bloomer's "How Jones Saved the Twink" in the last Typographical Journal.

Organized labor loses a good friend by the retirement of Congressman Joel P. Heatwole, chairman of the House Printing Committee. Mr. Heatwole's retirement is voluntary, as he is very popular in his district, and it is rumored that he is slated for higher honors. To whatever he aspires he deserves the support of all union men.

The Typographical Journal under the new plan is a publication well worthy the great organization it represents, and Bloomer's fiction and news notes, Rodier's splendid article on trades unionism, and Kreiter's newsy paragraphs are features well worthy the prominence given. Come again, and come often, Washington scribes.

The number of semi-monthly pay days that fall on Saturday this year has led one of the papers to advocate holding the banks open later on these days so that the government employes will not run the risk of spending their salaries for lack of opportunity to deposit. It is not so very long ago that a financial institution of that sort which made a practice of accommodating Uncle Sam's hired help, kept open one Saturday until 5 or 6 o'clock and forgot to ever open again.

Meeting ex-President of the I. T. U., John M. Farquahar, recently, recalled the signal service he performed for trades unionism at the Pittsburg convention. That was the time when the Knights of Labor were encroaching upon the rights of the trades unions to such an extent that their total extinction was looked for by many, and the theorists in the union were openly advocating surrender. The I. T. U. fortunately had for president then a strong level-headed man in the person of Martin Witter, of St. Louis, who, by the aid of John M. Farquahar and others, at Pittsburg thoroughly routed the seceders, and I have always maintained that the organization owes a debt of gratitude to Major Farquahar for his action then which it can never repay.

Measurement of extra price matter under the piece scale was always a cause of trouble, and the Business Committee in the days of hand composition had many problems to solve. Columbia Union's newspaper scale called for double price for ads inclosed within a border, and manufactured letters were also measured double. I remember one instance where the Star had a page ad for the Oriole celebration, the word "Oriole" was manufactured from agate caps, the column rules were retained in the ad, and it was surrounded by a border. One of the compositors claimed it was double price for the border, double price for the made letters, and that the column rules made it tabular matter and consequently double price—six prices in all. The Business Committee ruled against him and he appealed to the Union where he was also beaten, but I thought as I saw him on his way to the Swamp the other morning that he is of the same opinion still.

In the days when Columbia Union's annual election was the event politically in the District of Columbia, when the votes were cast at one polling place, many amusing scenes were enacted and certain parties got a good deal of fun out of it. One of the characters of those days and a hustler from Hustlerville, was George Washington Bailey, not related to Col. William H. Bailey that I know of, but built somewhat on the same generous proportions. George Washington was usually champion of the antis, and he believed in strenuous methods at all times. During one campaign he was the particular champion of an old gentleman who was a candidate for president, and who was the only successful candidate, I believe, George ever supported. Bailey worked for him early and late, and on the day of election nearly run his fat legs off getting the voters to the polls. Just prior to the closing hour he made out his ticket, stepped proudly up to the window, handed his ballot to one of the judges, and gave his full name with the air of one who has done his duty well and is now going to close the incident. The election officer took his ballot, but scanning the list found that George Washington Bailey had already voted. There was stormy weather in that locality about that time, but there was no help for it as the list showed that Mr. Bailey had voted once, and they ruled against him. Rumor said that Larry Pierce was afraid that Bailey would forget to vote owing to his enthusiasm in the cause he had espoused, and noticing the marked resemblance to Mr. Bailey of a pork butcher in the neighborhood named Owney McGee, had prevailed upon that gentleman to personate Mr. Bailey for the novice in the interest of good government, but those who know Larry, while they recognize his fealty at all times to the cause of reform, could hardly credit such a rumor. Mr. Bailey soon thereafter migrated to New York, where he has gained in fame and avoirdupois as an advocate of pure politics of the Tammany variety.

A little honor sometimes results in elephantiasis of the cranium to such an extent that it is gratifying to see such parties taught a lesson, which Harvey Ellis did to the chairman of the Washington delegation at one of the conventions in the '80's. An unwritten law of Columbia Union gives to the candidate receiving the highest vote the chairmanship, and there have been several instances in which the honor has fallen upon men of small calibre. In the present case the chairmanship fell to a member of the then largest chapel in the Union—a man of negative qualities, a man who had never done anything for the Union in any way, but was just one of these people whom nobody cares anything about particularly, who never takes sides on any question until they see which way the wind blows, and never antagonize anybody or anything, consequently while they never make any real friends they never make any enemies, and the party in question surprised everybody by receiving the highest vote that had ever been cast for a candidate by Columbia Union at that time, distancing his colleague by a large majority. His success so surprised everybody that a number of that class who are ever ready to worship at the shrine of the successful immediately started a boom for him for international honors, notwithstanding the fact that he had no qualifications whatever for anything, and had never been forty miles from the Government Printing Office in his life. In those days it was the custom to hold an informal reception, prior to the convening of the convention, for the purpose of getting acquainted, at which the ambitious aspirants for office were given a chance to spread themselves and show their mettle, and on this occasion about the third speaker called upon was the chairman of the Washington delegation, whom the toastmaster astonished all who knew him by lauding him to the skies as a man "of national, aye, international reputation, known to every union printer as a writer, a thinker, and a leader in all that is progressive," etc., until one of any experience would have known it was a "josh." At that period there was grave fears of the domination of the Knights of Labor, and no man, who espoused that idea could hope to gain honors in the International, and Harvey Ellis had coached the chairman of the Washington delegation that the Knights of Labor side of the question was the popular side to take, and he swallowed it hook, line, and sinker. I sat near him, and while the toastmaster was eulogizing him, I could see him swell until I feared the room would not hold him. He arose and started in, but he never finished. His first sentence proved to him that he had made a mistake, and in trying to hedge he got so deep in the mire that he floundered and stalled, until some one had the good sense to call him off. The Washington crowd had to stand a good deal of chafing all during the week, and the chairman took very little part in the proceedings of the convention.

THE BUCOLIC "CHAIRMAN."

Written for THE TRADES UNIONIST.]

In the morning or the evening
You may feel inclined to swipe
A page or two of "10-point,"
Or some useful "6-point" type;
But as sure as the daylight
Will the "chairman" beat his drum,
And impose the mighty dollar—
Then you'll
Hum,
Hum,
Hum.

Then the "proof" don't seem to suit you,
And you kick for a few more "rings,"
And you walk up to the foreman
With a view of straightening things;
But the "chairman" he will eye you,
And, alas! thy sorry plight,
You are bound to pay a dollar—
Or you'll Fight,
Fight,
Fight.

When the day of reck'ning cometh,
And you stand before the "throng"
In the tiny little "chapel,"
Where they have no pray'r or song;
You'll unbosom all thy troubles
And you pray for Kingdom come,
But the chairman is undauntless,
While you'll
Hum,
Hum,
Hum.

You can tell thy little story
To the breezes, if you may,
But the "chairman" will remind you
Not to have too much to say;
You may chatter all you want to,
Till the space-box fairly hums,
But the "cloture" of the "chairman"
Keeps you
Mum,
Mum,
Mum.

You can quarrel with thy neighbor,
On the nigger you may frown,
You can fill thyself with liquor
And proceed to paint the town,
But you dare not call the "chairman"
A blockhead or a chum,
For you'll have to pay a dollar—
And keep Mum,
Mum,
Mum.

A SONG OF TO-MORROW.

All things are good, if we would but believe it;
Each heartache finds some promise to relieve it.

The darkness of affection unrequited
Leaves not the manly soul for aye benighted.

The storms of fate but make the worthy stronger;
Tired heart, you'll rest, wait but a little longer.

Then let us sing the music of tomorrow,
Dispelling ere the night is past all sorrow.

Death of T. Howard McGill.

T. Howard McGill, an employe of the First Division, G. P. O., died Thursday morning, February 19, age 43 years. He was a son of the late Thomas H. McGill, of the firm of McGill & Wallace. Interment at Glenwood Cemetery, Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Death of T. G. Williams.

Talison G. Williams, an old and respected member of Columbia Union, died Thursday morning after a long illness. He had not worked at the printing business for some time past, having left the Government Printing Office during Mr. Benedict's administration. He was a veteran of the civil war, joining a company of printers on the Cincinnati Enquirer, recruited and sent out by Washington McLean, the father of the present owner of that enterprising newspaper. Mr. Williams was a staunch advocate of the principle of unionism and enjoyed the respect of all his large circle of friends.

J. L. Rodier's paper in the February Typographical Journal, "Under Which King, Benzonian?" presents a timely, forceful, and instructive view of a serious question. Mr. Rodier fears the headstrong socialistic element—"the militant party in the ranks of labor." And he advances a strong plea for what he calls "confederation"—already a growing force in the American Federation of Labor—as an offset to the dangerous and increasing influence of well-meaning men who grow impatient at the "slow results of time," and have about as much respect for the mechanism of organized society as a small boy has for the innards of a toy elephant. Generally speaking, it is to be hoped that the conservative and yet progressive ideas of which our friend is an advocate will prevail, although it undoubtedly looks as if the fight for their maintenance is to be a long and bitter one.

Another Washington contributor to the February Journal is Arthur F. Bloomer—our A. F. Bloomer—whose delightfully satirical sketch, "How Jones Saved the Twink," is in his best style and has undoubtedly been thoroughly enjoyed by the Washington contingent. And by the way, our friend has become a veritable glutton for literary work of late. It is not so long ago that he wandered into the flower garden of song and gathered boquets for his friends and lampoons for "some people." Then we find him seated under the weeping willow tree of reminiscence; and again he invites us to a stroll amidst the night-blooming plants of psychic research. And it was only last week that he put his hands to the plow and turned up fecund furrows of thought through the columns of the Post in vindication of Unionism against the fatuous aspersions of a minion of plutocracy. Seriously speaking, Mr. Bloomer is to be congratulated upon the mental elasticity which enables him to add so much literary work to the exacting labor of his position in the G. P. O., and undoubtedly his growing constituency will join in the hope that he may long continue to amuse and instruct them through the columns of THE TRADES UNIONIST and other publications.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL WASHINGTON. 2

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1903.

POLITICIANS are most interested in the number or size of drawers whenever Uncle Sam makes a new bureau.

THERE is already a disposition manifest in some quarters to abbreviate by simply referring to it as the Department of Commerce.

GENERAL MILES has returned from his trip around the world. A trip around the square is the most that ordinary mortals may hope for.

PEACE has been restored between Venezuela and the allied powers of Great Britain, Germany, and Italy. Matters yet in dispute are referred to The Hague.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has contributed to the prevailing opinion that the family plant has not yet reached that stage when it is wise to withhold encouragement to the infant industry.

THERE are a number of swindling mills in this country which find steady and profitable employment by the illegal use of Uncle Sam's mail bags, a fact which a multitude of victims could verify.

MR. BRYAN has declared that under no consideration will he be a candidate for the Presidency, and wishes to be regarded only as a plain worker in the ranks. There are those who insist that he is entitled to a complete rest.

MR CARNEGIE has made it plain that he is averse to individual gifts. This is pretty good, considering his eager and ready acceptance of princely bounties up to the point when the load was really getting to be a burden to him.

SOME newspapers and some people profess great dislike for the boycott, but have no words of reproach for the employer who uses the "black list" to abridge a man's opportunities for employment. The boycott is the junior in service and merely retalitory in character.

THE Coal Strike Commission has ended its labors, so far as the hearing and taking of evidence is concerned. During the sitting 570 witnesses were heard and the record makes 10,000 typewritten pages. The further work of the Commission will be to analyze the evidence and put it into shape to be submitted to Congress before the 4th of March, if possible.

MR. LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, is a lawyer of strenuous proclivities who framed an anti-trust bill which was said to be so full of flaws that the legal lights of the Senate were encouraged to turn away from it, fearing that its provisions would lead to untold legal disputes; and then along came Mr. ELKINS, with little or no knowledge of the law, with a sugar-coated preparation which won an approving smile as a thing pleasing to the trusts, perfectly harmless in its effects, and which is in no sense a "buster."

End of the Investigation.

The Strike Commission has now only to weigh the evidence and render its decision in matters of dispute between miners and operators, and that decision—whatever its terms—will be binding alike to each for three years. Attorneys for both sides in their closing arguments displayed considerable fervor. Mr. BAER, on behalf of the railroads, was unsparing in his criticism, not only of the men engaged in the strike but also of all who declared themselves in svmpathy with the miners, and his contempt of Congress for removing the duty on coal was expressed in language most vehement. Mr. DARROW, attorney for the miners, made the closing address, and laid the blame where it properly belongs by declaring that resistance to the miners' demands was the blow calculated to crush out the miners' union. Here are his words:

"It was not on the question of wages that these gentlemen precipitated this greatest conflict between capital and labor which the world has ever seen, this most gigantic strike in history, because in their minds it was a question of mastery—of nothing else; because they felt and they believed that upon this contest depended the question of whether they should be the masters or whether the men should be the masters. I believe the operators were induced and urged by the railroad companies to believe that here in the coal region was the final struggle to determine who were the masters in this country; whether the men were chattels or whether they were men endowed with the same right to look the other contracting party squarely in the face, the same right to make their own terms as to the hours of labor, the days of labor, the price of labor when they are selling their lives, as the master does when he is buying the laborer's life. This was the struggle and this was the cause. I prove it from their own mouths, and place the responsibility where it belongs—upon these men, who can not understand that the human race, through its long, sore, and bitter travail, has been moving onward and upward and forward toward the final democracy of man, to the time when each human being shall be a man, clothed with the right to live his life, not to be governed and ruled by such rules as the masters have ever imposed upon them."

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Gus Bruehl, of the Star, received a letter from "Shad" Campbell, now at the Printers' Home, the other day, which, after speaking of matters in general, expresses the hope that Columbia Union will allow a pension to its members at the Home, citing a number of unions which do so. I think myself that it would be a gracious act on the part of the Union, when one contemplates the hopeless lives of our unfortunates, and it would not be a drop out of our financial bucket. He mentions Jack Robinson, "Oth" Doughty, Jim Fitzgerald, Adrian Jones, "Skeezicks" Moore, Jim McGill, and Charlie Smith, all well known and most of them from here. "Shad" inclosed a semi-annual circular of Scranton (Pa.) Union of date September 1, 1874, for my benefit, but I will not be hoggish about it. I copy the names, many of which will be recognized by the "old rounder" brethren.

Members in good standing—J. H. Ager, E. Austin, G. W. Biglow, C. A. Campbell, W. E. Chase, W. N. Danvers, W. W. Davis, Alex Diack, E. T. Dillon, R. W. Eggert, William Ferguson, Alpheus Foote, W. E. Harris, H. A. Hendler, Robert Holmes, J. T. Howe, C. A. Ingalls, John Kavano, C. E. Lehman, G. W. Lesher, T. W. Levers, R. M. Looney, J. L. Lutton, Sam Miller, John Mishy, Ed McDaniels, John Morris, J. H. Reeve, Jacob Reith, G. W. Savige, F. L. Snyder, H. O. Sterrett, M. R. Stone, Alfred Twining, M. R. Walter, C. T. Welton, W. S. Williams, E. L. Wolf.

Bob Hale, who hails from Scranton, will undoubtedly know most of these, though I don't find his name on the list. W. E. Chase was for a number of years a compositor and proofreader here and is now assistant chief of the New York World proof room. Billy Ferguson was secretary of New York Union for a number of years, and was found dead in a room in a Harlem hotel, asphyxiated by gas, supposed to be an accident.

It is among the "Withdrawn by card" that we find the names well known throughout printerdom: W. H. C. Breggeman, T. E. Bushnell, D. M. Butler, W. M. Camp (now in the Day Second Division), I. H Carr, W. P. Chew (who died here about nine years ago), Thad S. Clinch, H. Fahey, John Fitzhenry, E. S. Flanagin (who wasn't Irish because of the "i" in the last syllable), Andrew Gilmore, G. W. Green, W. L. Grey, N. P. Hanton, H. J. Kimpton, R. Keller, J. W. Lee, G. L. Manchester, John McNamee, H. N. Mishler, Dorsey O. Mitten, O. S. Montz (well known here until his death, several years ago), T. E. Nevins, John O'Brien, Elias Powell, Simon Raminger, Stephen Rice (the "Shorty" Rice I mentioned last week), J. H. Ross ("Jy" was foreman of the Times when I was there), J. H. Sergeant, J. E. F. Smith ("Texas Smith," who has been everywhere, and who was traveling with me at this time), Wm. St. Charles (has been here several times), D. C. Stevenson, A. L. White, George B. Willis.

Scranton was a famous place for "tourists" in those days, as this list of the "birds of passage" who called and departed within six months will show, though it was then a town of not more than 30,000 inhabitants, having since risen to the position of third city in the State.

It is never popular to say "I told you so," and I won't say it. But I can't find it in me to smile at the honest farmer who invests in gold bricks or answers a "come on" circular when events demonstrate that we have so many "dead easy" people among our intelligent—oh, most extraordinarily intelligent!—printers. But why repine? If it had not been Arnold it would have been some one else. Those who are looking for "good things" where they put down one and pick up three or four can always find a place to put down, but the picking up is generally limited to what is necessary to bring in the greatest amount of stuff and the greatest number of suckers. Now save up again, boys, till the next thing offers that savors a little of "sporting" and promises ten times more than any man could make good on, and then let her go! I don't think they can hold you for Arnold's debts while he is enjoying in Europe the results of your toil that he has been industriously putting into foreign exchange. At least save up enough to enable the bookies at the spring meet at Bennings to provide for a long, hot, dry summer. Don't be satisfied with the old slow way of simply saving up your money, but get rich quick or not at all, with the latter a 100 to 1 shot.

On Tuesday of last week the Evening Star bow-wowed the idea that Mr. Rockefeller had sent any telegrams to Senators protesting against trust regulation; on Wednesday it barked that Mr. Rockefeller had the same right to use the telegraph that any other citizen has; on Thursday it bayed that the Rockefeller telegrams were roorbacks; on Saturday it whined about the right of petition. This being a volunteer yellow dog involves a heap of chasing around, swapping ends, and yelping at what it hopes it is wanted to yelp at, doesn't it?

The second number of the new Typographical Journal even excels the first in literary merit and interest to the craft. I think a very brief time will demonstrate the wisdom of sending this educator to every printer's door, not only in the improvement it will bring about among the lukewarm, but in making it clear to all that the safety and welfare of printers and workingmen in general are in unionism.

* * * *

Union politics were never so dull at this season before. Scarcely any have as yet announced their willingness to serve the union as delegates this summer, and even some of my nominees of some weeks ago have done nothing about it. Gentlemen, I can't elect you single handed and alone. You must give me some help. Frank Bates has defiantly flung his banner to the breeze and R. A Nelgner has signified that "Barkis it willin'." But those are all. Next year you'll want to go to St. Louis and we won't let you—not at our expense. Get in now, while the thing is easy.

Poor old "Professor" Nicholson hung himself because he couldn't pay his rent. The papers stated that he was well known by reason of having been in the neighborhood for eight years. He used to shave me at practically the same location twenty years ago and I think has been right there on the south side of H street, between the G. P. O. and First street, ever since. Well, the newspaper report was two fifths correct, which is a fair per cent.

The other day I heard that poor old Jack Griffin is confined to his home in Alexandria, rendered helpless by age and disease and almost entirely destitute. It is not permissible to take up a subscription for him in the G. P. O. because he never was an employe there, except as a "sub" on the Record for a brief time about 1880, but there is nothing to prevent his friends and the charitable from coming to his relief, for if there ever was a meritorious case, this is one. He raised a large family, one or more of whom were permanently afflicted, and I never knew him to take a drink of liquor or indulge in any vice, but he was always delving hard to support those dependent upon him. There will be no trouble in getting any relief to him which the charitable may be willing to bestow.

I had a letter from Billy Mill, of Chicago, the other day, in which he acknowledges receipt of our Yearbook. He says the Old Time Printers' Franklin Birthday dinner was a great success, the capacity of the Sherman House being overtaxed. Bob Tilney was there from Cincinnati and former printer Dick McNamee, a Minnesota State senator. Mr. and Mrs. Mill will be with us at the convention this summer, and perhaps other members of his most interesting family. His boy is in the Navy. He says, "Tell Ned Kerrott that the old timers would like to hear from him occasionally." He desired to be remembered to Billy Briggs, John L. Kennedy, and all the Washington bunch he met at Cincinnati.

Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Glenn gave an "At home" at their residence, No. 16 Q street N. E., on this Thursday evening, in celebration of the twentieth anniversary of their marriage, to which I acknowledge invitation. Mr. Glenn is a Day Third Division compositor and he and his good lady are very popular in their large circle of friends.

A University of Chicago professor announces to an open-mouthed world that "stock watering" is a good thing. He calls it "capitalized good will." Let us look into it a little and apply it at home. The stock of the Washington Gaslight Company is four-fifths water—that is, for one-fifth of its alleged capital every item connected with its business could be duplicated. If that were done, gas bills of one fifth their present amount would render the same amount of income on the capital actually invested that the present figures give on the alleged capital. The element of "good will" does not enter into it; you take gas of this company or you don't take gas at all, for Congress will not permit competition. There you are, and Rockefeller evidently owns the souls of his college professors as well as their services. Every dollar of capital stock above what is actually necessary to conduct the business of a corporation furnishes the opportunity for robbing patrons, as to which there can not be two opinions in the minds of honest men.

"Chief" Matt Hayes sends me the following, which he says he clipped from the Western Laborer, date not given, and he says Mr. Goggin is all right and that one will not need a letter of introduction in order to see him. The big chief was in Toledo when he wrote all this, in addition to which he says Mr. Gompers could have landed the place if concerted action had been taken. This is the clipping:

"Hon. Patrick Goggin, labor editor of the Lynn (Mass.) Item, is slated to succeed Carroll D. Wright as head of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, the latter retiring to accept the presidency of Clark University. Mr. Goggin is a veteran of the Spanish-American war, a scholarly, cultured, and courteous gentleman, and his writings on economic subjects have attracted wide attention not only in New England and other manufacturing centres, but also throughout Europe. Irrespective of the political side of the nomination, President Roosevelt honors himself as well as the cause of labor by the wisdom manifested in this nomination. Corporal Goggin has the powerful political backing of the Hon. Richard Cutts, U. S. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Hon. Fred Rundlett, Chester Morse, John Gove, William F. Mitchell, and a host of other distinguished New Englanders. In all likelihood at the present session of Congress the bureau will be raised to the dignity of a cabinet position under the title of Department of Commerce and Labor."

Which has "done been done."

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

Union meeting Sunday.

Mr. G. Hog is right this year.

Matt Maloney is able to return to work after his severe sickness.

Eleven more working days for Congress.

The number who paid their respects by valentine this season exceeded all previous records. The most complimented were those who did not receive.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians of the District of Columbia will trip the light fantastic on Monday evening, February 23, 1803, at Washington Light Infantry Armory, Fifteenth and E streets northwest.

Mrs. Jacob L. Fechtig, wife of the well-known printer of that name, is in Providence Hospital, where she is in a serious condition. Mrs. Fechtig was at one time employed in the Government Printing Office, at that time being a Miss Annie Carpenter.

F. S. Clinton, for a long time an employe in the G. P. O. foundry, and the first president of Stereotypers and Electrotypers' Union, but whom ill health deterred in recent weeks from working, left last week for Albuquerque, N. Mex., in quest of bettering his condition. May he find the same.

Second Division.

"Sis" Hopkins is on the sick list.

Hutchinson, slug 39, is still confined to his bed. Here's hoping he will soon recover.

Mr. Drake, treasurer of the chapel, will soon have money to burn if this "fine" business keeps up.

We had the "finest" exhibition of minority rule in this division during the past week it has ever been our good fortune to witness.

F was fine; Z was finer, but we think the boys will all agree that when we got way up in G—we reached fineness in the superlative degree.

The members of this chapel desire to express their gratitude to the employes of the Third for their generous response to the subscription passed in behalf of one of our members who is sick.

The sports of this division bowled another championship series at the Rathskeller last Friday night. The teams showed marked improvement and they hope to be in condition to challenge the First Division team soon. Hallock was in rare form. The following was the score:

RICHARDS' TEAM.	First game.	Sec'nd game.	Third game.	Total.
Richards	157	123	145	425
Saltzman	149	144	116	409
Smith	159	167	152	478
Branham	93	135	115	343

Proof-room Pencil Points.

Capt. George W. Manning is quite seriously afflicted, physically, and has been absent for the past ten days or more.

Foreman Charles M. Robinson was confined to his home for a few days last week on account of an ulcerated tooth, and Fred A. Hall, assistant, acted in his stead.

Press Reviser Augustus L. Roberts, in company with Mrs. R., left the city on Tuesday last for a few weeks' tour through the Southern Peninsular State. After an inspection of Jacksonville, St. Augustine, and other places of note, they will visit Tampa, the residence of Mr. Roberts' brother.

J. S. Atkinson, brother of an ex-Governor of the Mountain State, firmly believes that the capital (Charleston), the great Kanawha Valley, and all that lies within the boundaries of that series of elevations and depressions known as West Virginia is the very best earthly representation of Heaven.

That which the late A. T. Cavis was wont to facetiously term "unsilence" prevailing to such an extent in the "silent room" as to make the name a misnomer, one of the tortured souls therein expresses his anguish in the following rhythmic wail:

There is entirely too much noise
Here in this room among the boise;
It breaks quite up the reader's thought,
Exhausts the patience he has gought,
Works on his nerves till he would feign
Quit work and rest his weary breign
And to some quiet region fligh
By sad seashore or mountain high
Till into his unquiet breast
Would steal a gentle sense of reast.

As the time draws near to hold the annual election for delegates to the International Typographical Union, which will meet in this city during the coming summer, a gentleman of the Proof Room, well known and active in Union circles, rises up to place in nomination the following-named members, whom he believes to be eminently qualified to represent No. 101 on the floor of the International body, viz: Messrs. Mark Barnum, William Love, Joe Babcock, Chas. Gove, and "Hank" Allen.

In reviewing the personnel of the Proof Room, it is noted that of the military-titled employes the largest number bear the prefix of "Major." Major J. R. McKelvey, of New York, Major John D. Russell, of Missouri, and Major C. A. Vaughn, of Illinois, earned their titles in gallantly battling for the preservation of the Union. Next in point of numbers are captains—George W. Manning and Dan V. Chisholm. The first named lost a limb on the bloody field, and the second, as a member of the District regiment in the Spanish-American war, lost sleep in the Santiago trenches. William H. Towers, the only colonel among us, gained his title by service on one of the Gotham dailies, where he wielded a mightier weapon than the sword. We are also in possession of one general—W. C. Lambert, who, though not commissioned by any regularly constituted authority, well deserves the proud distinction, as he is loyal to the flag. The hard service bravely rendered, in the camp, on the march, and on the field of blood, as sergeants, corporals, and privates in the Union army during the war of the '60's, entitle the following-named to the everlasting gratitude of the American people, viz: Joseph S. Clarke, Wm. L. Schmalhoff, Charles M. Robinson, Wm. F. Dorsey, J. A. Scott, W. S. Baker, A. L. Roberts, Zidon E. Ross, Albert E. Ingalls, Wm. H. Livermore, O. F. Mattingly, and E. L. Russ.

THE BANQUET.

H. A. S.

As banquets go
'Twas not so slow
The minutes flew
Expectations too.

The menu card
Was looked at hard
Things printed there
Were seen nowhere.

The usual sound
"Must pass it 'round"
The end men seen
What might have been.

R. D. B. firm
And manly spoke
For one more term
A masterstroke.

And W. H. K.
Himself outclassed
When he'd his say
Drinks had been passed.

But J. L. F.
Went o'er the sea
Ignored our chef
Spoke of Paree.

The talent was
So crisp and sunny
Those jokes with fuzz
Seemed almost funny.

The chairman had
A fetching grin
We are not mad
How much he's in.

A hungry set
When they arrived
We wonder yet
How they survived.

Some had no pluck
But had a thirst
He was in luck
Who grabbed one first.

When time had come
To say good night
The one bright bomb
Was that flashlight.

When D. O'Brien
Sent us away
One grand bee line
For a cafe.

Major B. Collins, of the ruling room, is jealous of John Griffin. It is reported that John is buying furniture.

The Get-Rich Quick bookbinders are looking sad since the collapse of the St. Louis Turf Investment Co.

Have you learned the new grip? If not, call on Prof. Nelson in the blank room. Only healthy men taken in the order.

The first bookbinders banquet of the season was held at the Hotel Oxford Saturday evening, and was greatly appreciated by all those who took part.

Adam Sommers' bachelor dinner, given to a number of his friends at the Hotel Gordon last week, was very elaborate and the boys had a very enjoyable time:

Next Saturday, the 21st inst., another banquet will be given; this time at Cafe Bessler, Pennsylvania avenue. A former chef of the Waldorf-Astoria will prepare the menu and one hundred bookbinders will dine while the sweet strains of a Hungarian orchestra plays charming music. The committee in charge is Messrs. Hardy, Stack, Haslett, and Cassidy.

War Branch.

My old friend Judge Tallman sends me a clipping from the Army and Navy Journal suggesting that the organizations benefiting by the life service of the late Amos Cummings honor his memory by annually celebrating the day of his birth. The idea is a good one and we all hope it may be adopted. The Journal was enthusiastic in its praise of Mr. Cummings and of the interest he displayed in the soldier, the sailor, and the printer. So let's get together by all means. Already it is proposed to erect a monument to his memory, which will be done just so surely as his works live after him. There was nothing too good for Mr. Cummings while he lived, and it is a comforting thought that the craft will bequeath his example to the ages in eulogy and bronze.

Strangely enough, Mr. Cummings used to visit my town. It was about thirty years ago, and he spent several winters there fishing and hunting. The town then had about one thousand inhabitants, and boasted a weekly paper and one business street. Mr. Cummings soon got acquainted with the editor and spent a good deal of his time in the office swapping stories and reading the exchanges. They became fast friends and remained so through life. Several years later the editor visited New York and called at the Sun office. Mr. Cummings gave him the glad hand and entertained him handsomely. But speaking of this office—in which I learned my trade—located in the region where the waters of the Atlantic are prevented from mingling with those of the Gulf, I am reminded of a story: About 1870, Charlie Thomas, a printer from Clarksville, Tenn., came to my town on account of his health. His baggage consisted of a violin and valise, and being of a jovial nature he soon became very popular. Thomas was a splendid character and he found no difficulty in getting work in the only office in the county. On Christmas eve some of the colored gentry got gay and the white citizens had to adopt strenuous measures. At that time Thomas had only been out of the Confederate army about five years and he carried in his valise two horse pistols that had served him in the war for a more perfect Union. He had been at work two days. About 11 o'clock the shooting began, and the sheriff loped down the main street calling on the citizens to help him stop the disorder. Thomas dropped stick and rule and secured his pistols; he cleared the stairs in three bounds and reached the sheriff's side. The real work was all over in a few seconds, and then the colored gentry ordered a shroud for one of their number and surgeons for several wounded. And yet people contend that some printers can do nothing but set type.

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. VII. No. 37. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1903. Price, 3 Cents.

AN INTERESTING MEETING

Columbia Union Debates the Question of Granting Special Privileges.

"EVENING TIMES" PROPOSITION

The Grievance Committee Reports Corbett Thompson's Sharon Dairy Unfair—The Ladies' Auxiliary Recognized—Union Refuses to Change Present Style of Due Card—Denial of Story Current Against Representative Fletcher.

The regular meeting of Columbia Typographical Union was held Sunday, February 15, 1903, when an adjournment was had to last Sunday (22d) to complete the order of business.

The minutes of the January meeting being approved, the report of the Committee on Nominations was taken up. Further time was asked on the application for membership of C. E. LaVigne. Granted. The report of the committee on the applications of F. A. White, John P. Murray, and E. R. Sprague being favorable, a ballot was taken and the gentlemen were duly elected. James M. McCauley was elected to apprentice membership. The application for reinstatement of Thomas Becker being reported favorably, he was duly reinstated on a vote of the Union.

Mr. Whitehead, of the Convention Committee, made a report on the progress of work in the hands of that committee.

Mr. Bynum, of the Printing Committee, reported the completion of work on the Yearbook and stated that a complete report would be submitted at the March meeting of the Union.

The Grievance Committee reported that Corbett Thompson, proprietor of the Sharon dairy, refused to employ members of the Milk Drivers' Union, and recommended that he be placed on the unfair list. This was agreed to, after a motion by Mr. Lerch to place a fine of $5 on any of our members patronizing the Sharon dairy.

The committee also recommended that Chas. Rauscher, caterer, be placed on the unfair list, at the request of the Electrical Workers, for refusing to consider the employment of union men on the establishment of Mr. Rauscher, Connecticut avenue and L street.

The committee asked for further time in the case of John Coleman, horseshoer, 1301 Thirty-sixth street N. W., as the trouble in that shop seems to be in a fair way for settlement.

The Relief Committee reported—through Mr. Stelle, its chairman—that the committee did not need any further appropriation from the union at present. The secretary of the union was authorized to advance the committee the sum of $50, if it were necessary, for use of the committee before the next meeting.

The Laws Committee reported an amendment, to be considered at the March meeting, prohibiting members of the union joining any trade society or organization the "purposes of which are in any manner or form inimical or antagonistic to the principles, objects, and purposes of this union."

Mr. Hall, from the Allied Printing Trades Council, reported that the council intended presenting a pamphlet containing allied label offices, and that the union could insert any other matter of importance it desired in said publication. On motion of Mr. Merritt the delegates from the Allied Printing Trades Council were given discretion in the matter.

Mr. Brockwell, from the special committee appointed to consider the advisability of changing the present working card, reported that the proposed change was unnecessary and unwise, and was not indorsed by the executive officers of the union or the auditors. The report of the committee was adopted.

The president made a report to the union at length, announcing three deaths since the January meeting. He recommended that the sum of $20 be appropriated for use of the Ladies' Auxiliary in preparation for organization before the convention next August. He also recommended an appropriation of $50 for file cabinet for use of the secretary. Both recommendations were agreed to.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

Frank A. Munsey, proprietor of the New York Daily News, the Boston Journal, and the Washington Times, recently submitted a proposition to send to this city matrices for a magazine supplement not to exceed twelve pages, to be issued with the Sunday morning Washington Times.

The chairman of the Times chapel presented the matter to the officers of the union and asked for a ruling upon it, stating at the same time that Mr. Munsey was willing to pay for it, and asked what the compensation should be if the privilege were granted. He also stated that the members of the Times chapel would be better compensated by receiving the night scale for day work than by simply receiving pay for the face of the matter.

A ruling was made granting the privilege, with the understanding that the compensation should be the night scale for day work and that the supplement should not exceed twelve pages.

This action was afterwards ratified by the Times chapel.

Mr. Parsons, of the Times chapel, introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Times chapel recommend that the union instruct its officers to enter into a contract with Mr. Frank A. Munsey, or his agent, whereby he (Mr. Munsey), will be allowed to furnish twelve pages or less of the illustrated magazine supplement, the rate of pay to be at the night scale in the Times office for daily papers.

The resolution was nonconcurred in.

The president also reported that a rumor has been current that Representative Fletcher, of Minnesota, had introduced a bill in Congress to reduce the pay of all skilled employes in the G. P. O. to $3.20 per day. In an interview with the secretary (Mr. Garrett) he informed the officers of the Union that he not only did not introduce such a bill, but would oppose any measure of that kind. The president stated he made a report of this matter to give simple justice to Mr. Fletcher, who had always been friendly to organized labor.

Mr. Otis, from the Board of Trustees, introduced a resolution, calling on the first Board of Trustees having charge of the Temple (Messrs. Depue, Drake, and McLean) to transfer the deed on the Temple to the present Board of Trustees, which was adopted.

Promptly at 2:30 p. m. the president called the adjourned meeting to order and announced the consideration of the report of the officers as being in order.

Mr. Hussey submitted the following resolution:

WHEREAS, The question of newspaper syndicates and consequent transfer of matrices is one of grave importance; and

WHEREAS, A difference of opinion exists as to the correct interpretation of the International and local laws with respect to such matters; therefore

Resolved, That the Laws Committee be directed to draw up and transmit to the President of the I. T. U., for submission to the Executive Council, a full statement of the proffer of Mr. F. A. Munsey to Columbia Union, the decision of the officers of the union, and the action of the union, with a request that laws governing the matter be interpreted, and an international decision be rendered in the case as one of such widespread importance as to concern every union in the International jurisdiction.

Mr. Peake moved to lay the resolution on the table, which was agreed to.

Mr. Pierce offered the following as an amendment to the report of officers, which was agreed to:

WHEREAS, The proposition of the publishers of the Washington Times to pay the night scale for all work done on that paper for the privilege of importing from New York up to twelve pages per week for the Sunday edition of said paper is inimical to the best interests of the craft in general; if this concession was granted to the Times the other newspapers of Washington, for self-protection, would be compelled to demand the same privilege, or its equivalent, and would be a detriment to every member of Columbia Union; and

WHEREAS, It has always been the policy of the International Typographical Union and all Unions subordinate thereto to endeavor to create as many situations as possible at the recognized scale of prices in the different jurisdictions, and to put all employes on an equal footing under said scale of prices; that the granting of this concession to the publishers of the Times would be in direct opposition to this policy; and

WHEREAS, It has never been the policy of the International Typographical Union, or its subordinate unions, to advocate or concur in any proposition that had for its purpose the increase of the wage of an individual member or group of members, to the detriment of the remaining members of the union, the granting of the proposed concessions would do this, in direct opposition to both past and present I. T. U. and local policy; and

WHEREAS, Section 7 of the scale of prices of Columbia Union has been, on several occasions, construed to mean that all "borrowed matter in the shape of plates, matrices, &c., must be reproduced as the only equitable mode of securing just and full compensation, and has been thusly enforced in the several offices in this jurisdiction, and under our present agreement with the Publishers' Association; and

WHEREAS, Section 144, general laws of the International Typographical Union, is so plain on this question when it says that the practice "shall not be allowed," and adds the proviso that "the reproduction of such type, matrices, or plates shall be deemed a compliance with this law," that serious consideration should never have been given the proposition of the Times management by this union; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Columbia Typographical Union insist upon the reproduction of all such borrowed or purchased matrices, plates, &c., in the future as it has in the past, as the only equitable way to arrive at a full and just compensation for their use.

The report of the officers of the union was then adopted as amended.

Mr. Pierce offered the following resolution, which was agreed to:

WHEREAS, Columbia Union has no scale or agreement covering the class of newspaper now published by Mr. Munsey—a six-day evening paper with a Sunday morning edition; therefore

Resolved, That the president appoint a committee of three from the newspapers to negotiate a scale and agreement covering that class of publication; that section 4 of the agreement between Columbia Union and the Publishers' Association be extended so as to include the Washington Times, the committee to agree as to time.

On motion of Mr. Lerch the secretary was instructed to inform the Boston Union of the action taken in reference to the importation of matrices from New York by Mr. Frank A. Munsey.

Mr. Peake offered a resolution to appoint a committee of three members to make a suitable floral presentation to Hon. Arthur P. Gorman, of Maryland, on his re-entrance into the Senate next March, in appreciation of his work for the union in the past.

The resolution was, on motion, laid on the table.

The special committee on down town book and job scale made a report which, after discussion, was sent back to the committee for further conference with the employers.

The consideration of several pending amendments to the scale of prices was deferred until further report from the special committee.

Adjourned.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

A friend hands me this well-written sketch of the once celebrated Peter B. Lee, known during the last twenty years of his life in every city, village, and hamlet in the United States, as well as at many a farmhouse between, which I give without quotation marks or other distinguishments:

A score of years back, when the writer was just starting out as a journeyman, perhaps the most widely known tourist printer was old Peter B. Lee. The writer knew him well, and enjoyed his confidence in an unusual degree. As told me, his story was a very sad one. Educated in an Eastern college, a fine scholar, he married young and happily. Settling down in a Nebraska town, his attainments soon won him recognition and great esteem. He was running a prosperous newspaper, had a happy home, an idolized wife and baby, when the war broke out. Feeling it his duty to fight for the Union, he sold his paper, gave the proceeds and all his accumulated wealth to his wife, and went to the front in response to President Lincoln's call. For four years he bravely bore the heat of battle and the ardor of marches. When the war ended he came home to find his baby dead, his home in ashes, and his wife gone with another man. His misfortune broke his heart, blasted his ambition, and he became a wanderer.

He thought it beneath the dignity of a printer to ride in box cars, and when he could not pay fare he walked. He always carried a box of paper collars, a change of socks, and a bundle of newspapers collected from editorial sanctums. Having an early acquaintance with all the classics, a remarkable memory, and being all his life an omnivorous reader, he was the best posted man I ever knew. He was known from Maine to California. He once told me to mention every town I had ever worked in. I mentioned some forty towns, big and little, some a thousand miles apart. Peter knew the editors, the devils, the gin emporiums, etc., in all.

Peter, though a Union soldier, loved the South, and made many tours through it. He got his route down so well in later years that he would calculate to spend the night at a certain farmhouse, and he was always welcome. Bringing all the news from the outer world, and being an interesting talker and a good reader, he always entertained the farmer's family for his board and lodging, and was always begged to stay longer.

Going out on foot for a long itinerary of small towns, he was occasionally lost to the craft at large for months. It frequently happened that some tramp would be killed by the cars in Peter's neighborhood when on one of these tours. He would always clip the account from the local papers, then write a long obituary for himself, stating that the tramp had been identified as Peter B. Lee. This he would sign with a fictitious name and send to the old Craftsman. Fully half a dozen such obituaries appeared in a dozen years. Finally the old fellow did die, but no one believed it until official statements were published from the secretary of the Union that buried him.

Peter told me that in 1870 he and a companion started to walk from Kansas City to Denver. Out on the Great American Desert they lost their way and one night were famishing for food and water, especially the latter. They slept on the open prairie and before day they were up and pushing on in a mad hope of finding water. With the first gray dawn they espied seven large cottonwood trees a mile or so ahead. As this oasis probably meant water they pushed on, and as they approached a horrid human corpse was found dangling from each tree. The Regulators had been punishing cattle thieves. They found water and pushed on.

Once in a well-known printers' resort in Memphis, during the races, a crowd of prints were discussing the horses and betting their strings on favorites. Peter had in a day or two and offered to bet 3,000 (ems) on a certain horse. A seedy looking stranger, evidently a planter, heard the remark and stepped up, saying he would take that bet, whereupon he pulled out a greasy wallet and counted out thirty long green century bills. Peter looked at him with surprise and disgust. "Oh, you d——d fool; we are not betting money but type. We are printers," said Peter.

Peter happened into Fort Scott, Kans., the day Grant died, and was asked by the editor of the Monitor to write an article on Grant. He did so, and it was so good that it was published as a leading editorial and was copied far and wide.

Peter died at Beatrice, Nebr., about fifteen years ago. He was known more widely and regretted more sincerely than any tourist printer, perhaps, that ever lived. He had a big funeral and the craft papers were full of his life, his deeds, and his final taking off. A kind-hearted, intelligent, genial old gentleman, he had only one enemy in all the world and that was himself. May he rest in peace.

Through all his life he bore
The grand old name of gentleman.

A friend of mine told me a story of the younger days of the now great Adolph S. Ochs, who owns a few newspapers in the principal Eastern cities. Mr. Ochs began his newspaper career in Chattanooga, Tenn., and though but 20 years old, was already the proprietor of a daily journal. Among his compositors was a man not named George Ray, but that was sufficiently near to it. Ray had violated the office rules against intoxication and neglect of work until patience was exhausted and he was discharged. A day or two after a lady called on Mr. Ochs.

"I am Mrs. Ray," she said, "and my husband has been discharged. He is barred from the other offices and can not get work in the city unless you employ him. I am in bad health; we have two little children, and I don't know what we will do unless you give him work."

"Send Mr. Ray to see me to-morrow morning," said Mr. Ochs.

The next morning Ray came in.

"Ray," said Mr. Ochs, "you violated my rules until I could put up with you no longer. Any one who works for me must obey my rules. Go upstairs and tell the foreman I say you are to go to work when you want to and stay away when you want to, and he is to report to me what you earn and I will pay you for it. You are not in my employ, but I will pay you what you earn. You are to do just as you please about earning anything. Now go!"

Ray went upstairs and went to work, and from that day to this, over twenty years, he has never been known to take a drink of liquor. In the meantime he has bought and paid for a house and reared his children comfortably.

The capable writer who has been furnishing most entertaining old-time sketches recently on the first page of this paper and manifestly hailing from the Specification Division—I know who he is, but I guess if he wanted the world to know he would sign his excellent work—was very good to me in his last batch, for which I am properly grateful. It is just such work as he is doing that I want to see in THE TRADES UNIONIST and for which I have appealed a time or two. It helps the paper, but it helps us a good deal more. Many a man has got his literary start in the world in such a way, and I know a number of clever writers who might use some of their superfluous time in interesting us and fitting themselves for a career in this writing and printing age.

The death of John Porter Stout (or "Port," as the papers printed it), of heart failure, ended the career, at 49 years, of a rather remarkable character. He was an Ohioan by origin, but came here about 1877 and for a while worked in the G. P. O. When election time came around, he went home to vote, notwithstanding the assurance of some one in authority that if he did so he would be discharged, he being an ardent Democrat. There was considerable political intolerance as to Government employes in those days. After that he went to work on the old National Republican, staying there a couple of years, and then for a number of years I saw and heard little of him. I think he held a Government clerkship somewhere. About eight years ago he invented the scheme which formed the basis for the Economic Postage Company, by which the company was to furnish mailing cards to merchants and others to send to their customers, the company to pay the postage on all that were used, giving proper bonds to do so. This company, I believe, has never been granted permission to operate by Congress, but its prospects were so bright and the scheme so alluring that Mr. Stout received large sums of money for the stock, which, being of a generous as well as a bon vivant disposition, got away from him rapidly. His latest invention, for the exploiting of which a company was formed, was a buttonhole for shirts—a strip of cloth with two holes in it, made to paste over and take the place of damaged and enlarged buttonholes in neck and wrist bands. I never knew how this latter project prospered, but I think he realized something from stock sold. He was a wholesouled good fellow, without an atom of malice in his make-up, and leaves many friends who regret his death. I know nothing whatever of his family connections.

I have had to let out the neckband of my trousers a couple of links, put on bigger collars, and enlarge my headgear since reading the pretty things my good friend "Adam Bugg" said about me last week. I have heretofore had the pleasure of testifying my enjoyment of "Adam's" writings, and I renew and reiterate my expressions in that regard. As to the time for literary work, haven't we at least five or six hours a day to devote to reading and writing, without encroaching on official duties? Those of us who do not so use this time generally make a poorer use of it.

* * * *

Some time ago I wrote about an old book, "Robinson Crusoe," in the possession of A. P. Marston—not on account of its age, for it was only 53 years old, but because it was printed by the striking printers of Philadelphia. Harry E. Giles, of the Record, has a copy of John Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" printed in 1819, "by J. and E. Sanderson, printers, Elizabeth town," published by Benjamin Olds, Newark, N. J. It is set in pica, and the title-page says it is "embellished with elegant engravings," but very funny old woodcuts they are in this day. Though the paper is yellow and stained, the printing is as clear as the day it was turned out, and the binding, though a little frayed, will last a hundred years yet.

By a misprint—and I read the proof myself and can't kick—I said "Evening Star" last week when I meant Evening Times. I have long been of the opinion that no man is fit to read proof on his own writings. Everything is so familiar to him that he will run over the biggest "bulls" without seeing them. That is my experience with myself and observation in others.

I have just received a letter from T. B. Brown, foreman of the Kansas State Printing Office, at Topeka, acknowledging the receipt of our last Yearbook, in which he says:

The contents are both interesting and entertaining, and the typography and presswork are above criticism. I find a good many familiar names in the list of members.

While you enjoy the distinction of being a charter member of the original No. 121, Topeka, our new State Printer, George A. Clark, enjoys the same distinction on the charter list of No. 121 when it was reorganized in 1882. Clark was foreman of the old Commonwealth about that time. About 1885 he bought a paper up at Junction City, ran it successfully, got into politics and held several appointive offices, was elected Secretary of State in 1898 and served four years in that office, retiring January 13, 1903, and was elected State Printer January 20, 1903. His term as State Printer does not begin, however, until July 1 next. He is one of the old-school morning newspaper men—a distinctive class, now almost extinct.

He inclosed me a copy of "Bits of History," issued by Topeka Union a year or so ago, showing the original charter members December 29, 1869: A. F. Bloomer, E. F. Campbell, L. H. Hascall, T. V. B. Johnson, H. F. Marvin, B. C. Murray, and W. S. Reynolds; the recharterers on May 19, 1882: William H. Marrs, J. G. Talbott, George A. Clark, W. R. Bonner, D. W. Dearing, W. W. Wheeland, T. Q. Whitted, and J. J. Johnson; the charter members under a charter issued by the State authorities, March 24, 1883: S. D. Macdonald, W. R. Bonner, H. S. Knox, T. Q. Whitted, H. M. Ives, D. J. Nash, and Mark E. Tuttle; a facsimile of the semi annual report for July 6, 1874, which, in its list of "Withdrawn by card," shows such "noted" names as R. A. ("Archie") Blemner, John Curley, H. H. Hand, and our own John R. Rankin; the active membership in March, 1886, in which I find the name of but one man who was a member of Topeka Union when I was—S. D. Macdonald, since dead—but which contains the names of two of "Jake" Peffer's brothers, J. S. (since dead) and D. M.; the delegates from Topeka Union from 1870 to 1901; and the active membership list at date of issue, consisting of 110 names, in which the only name I recognize is that of my correspondent, Mr. T. B. Brown.

I also received a letter a few days ago from John J. Foster, formerly a compositor and later a reviser in the G. P. O., now a prosperous and rising young lawyer of Waco, Tex., accompanied by a photo of himself seated in a law office that has a look of prosperity about it. He left here four or five years ago and put up his shingle in Waco, and he now says there is no place in the G. P. O. below the Public Printer that would tempt him back to Washington. His success is an example of what almost any of our law graduates could achieve if they had the courage to branch out; but if they must be Washington lawyers or not at all, as a rule they had better hold on to their jobs, for the business is sadly overdone here. Foster formerly had a partner, but now plays a lone hand. He bids me to extend his congratulations to Captain Brian on his promotion, of whom he has the most kindly remembrance. He says he "almost devoured" our Yearbook, "page by page. It was like a nice, long letter from home. There is one thing, however, that made me feel rather bad, and that was to see the names of so many bright young men of my acquaintance who I knew had taken degrees in law and medicine still holding on to Government employment."

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL WASHINGTON. 2

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1903.

THE Omnibus Statehood Bill has rubbish enough to equip a first-class rummage sale.

THE aggregate wealth represented by the trusts doing business in this country is $14,000,000,000.

THE ship subsidy bill, which made its way through the Senate during the last session, received its death blow in the House on Monday.

WHENEVER a country is in the enjoyment of "good times" it will be observed that labor has found steady employment at good wages.

TRADES unionism has more organizers in the field to-day than ever before, and never was labor so thoroughly aroused to its own best interests.

SECRETARY CORTELYOU has asked for an appropriation of $7,000,000 for a building suited to the needs of the new Department of Commerce and Labor.

THE reading of WASHINGTON'S Farewell Address in the Senate on Monday was listened to with respectful attention, even by those who regard it merely as a back number.

HAS it come to pass that a credulous public is about to deny the doctrine of Divine right of the few to seize the gifts of Nature and by the same right parcel out as to them seemeth best?

IT is said that President ROOSEVELT has incurred the displeasure of the trust magnates by his persistence in recommending anti-trust legislation, but he continues straight ahead, as if sustained by a gale of public opinion coming from the nor'west.

THE Daughters of the American Revolution are holding their twelfth annual convention at Chase's Opera House this week. In their manner of expediting business by disposing of points of order and quieting disorder the score shows that they are several points ahead of their brethren on the hill.

A CHAIRMAN of one of the divisions of the G. P. O. desires to call attention to page 64, section 84, I. T. U. laws, relative to undue reflection on himself and his chapel in the correspondence in our columns. We wish to assure him that we have no desire to fall under the ban of the I. T. U. law, and will in future watch the source of his complaint with renewed vigor.

THERE are several chapels in the G. P. O. having a number of bright men that might find time to give us a few items of interest to their respective chapels. We reserve the right to "kill" any item of a personal nature that may not reflect favorably on the person intended to compliment, and our correspondents will agree with us that this is eminently right and proper. Send in your contributions; we will attend to the rest of it.

A COMPLETE list of the fair firms in the building line is in course of preparation and will appear in our next issue. As the spring season is on the way our readers should see to it that in giving out contracts for work that only those firms employing union labor and whose employees can show a membership card in the allied building trades should be given a chance on their work. It will save considerable trouble and annoyance in the future.

THE amendment offered to the sundry civil bill by Senator Mason to increase the salary of the Public Printer $6,000 is a step in the right direction. With the steady growth of printing in the Government Printing Office added responsibility and labor is entailed on the Public Printer, and to no other officer of the Government falls the amount of labor necessary to the proper conduct of his bureau as in the establishment in question. We might add that it is also in line with a suggestion made in these columns recently by a former prominent member of Columbia Union.

THE contention is sometimes made that by the combination of capital the cost of production is lessened and that as a consequence the consumer is the beneficiary. It can not be denied that combination and monopoly offer great advantages to the capitalist, as he is thus placed in command of all those agencies which control prices of the raw material and the finished product as well, and the combination complete also includes the control of transportation, so that every door to competition or trade rivalry having been closed the public, with its needs, is at the mercy of the combinations, who have not yet intimated in any way that they are in business for their health. Those good plain people who are being specially benefited by the scheme will please step forward and register.

WE are in receipt of a communication from "Two Subscribers" calling attention to a paragraph in a contributed article in our issue of the 12th inst. The writer expresses surprise that it was allowed to pass the scrutiny of the editor, owing to the nature of the subject treated in the article. The story detailed the experience of a man who "hit" the Louisiana lottery for $15,000 and started a billiard room with bar attached. Inexperience at that kind of business proved a failure and by some sharp practice his landlord got nearly all his money and finally ousted him.

While the story might be condensed into a mention of the incident instead of making nearly half a column, it was published as news, no name being mentioned, and it was not supposed the story would give the slightest offense. If it has, we regret it as much as "Two Subscribers."

The business of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, is attended to by about 100 public spirited members. DECISION OF SUPREME COURT.

Temporary Leaves of Absence in the Government Printing Office Adversely Decided.

Our readers will greatly regret to learn that the Supreme Court on Monday, February 23, announced a decision adverse to the claims of the temporary employees of the Government Printing Office for leave of absence pay. They now hold that the laws in regard to leaves of absence in that office never did include temporary employees, and that the words in the law of 1896 "that it shall be lawful to allow pay for pro rata leave to those serving fractional parts of a year" do not mean temporary employees, but only regular employees who happen to go out of service before the year is over. As the decision of the Supreme Court, written by Mr. Justice White, reviews the whole subject very fully and is concurred in by all the judges, nothing can be done to change it. The point on which the Supreme Court based its decision was not one taken by the attorneys for the Government at any time, and hence is the more surprising. The work done by the attorneys for the claimants, Messrs. Geo. A. & Wm. B. King, and their associate, Mr. Clark McKercher, has been untiring, and it is to be regretted that neither they nor the claimants are to reap any immediate benefit from it.

The attorneys have now under consideration a plan involving an appeal to Congress for a direct appropriation, but as nothing can be accomplished during the short time before adjournment of the present session there will be time during the coming summer to perfect the arrangements, and all the claimants will be notified as to what is to be done.

Interesting Debates.

The Bellamy Society will take part in two joint debates within the next few weeks, to which all who are interested are invited. Both these debates are part of the series conducted by the District of Columbia League of Debating Societies. The first subject is as follows:

Resolved, That by the Government's enforcing a minimum standard of living it is possible to improve the character of the human race.

The debate occurs March 3. The Bellamy Society takes the affirmative, the opposing society being the Elizabeth Cady Stanton Political Study Club.

One element of the minimum standard of living, namely, the living wage, is a familiar idea to trade unionists. The same may be said of sanitary regulations.

The other joint debate is on the following proposition:

Resolved, That in Governmental regulation and not in socialism lies the remedy for the troubles incident to our industrial system.

On this question the Bellamy Society takes the negative; that is, it upholds socialism. This debate occurs April 21. The opposing club is the Junior Equal Suffrage Association.

Both debates will be held at the Young Men's Christian Association building, 1732 G street northwest. All are invited.

Lawlessness a Menace to Labor.

Edgar E. Clark, the representative of organized labor on the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission, delivered an address in Boston, Wednesday, upholding union labor and defending the use of the strike as a weapon with which to force the acceptance of just demands when all peaceable methods have failed. It is worthy of note, however, that Mr. Clark, like Mr. Mitchell and many of the strongest men in the labor movement, is unsparing in his denunciation of strike violence and lawlessness. "If organized labor can not work out its salvation without resorting to unlawful acts," he said, "its existence can not be defended.

The emphasis which the ablest and most advanced labor leaders throughout the country have laid upon this point is significant. It undoubtedly reflects the sentiment of the great mass of union men, who have noted the peril with which acts of lawlessness menace the labor cause. One of the important lessons of the recent anthracite strike must be found in the fact that the evidence which proved most damaging to the miners and did most to weaken their position as applicants for justice was the proof of lawnessness in the mining districts.—Chicago News.

Union Printers' Home.

One of the best and most complete reports of the Superintendent of the Home, Mr. Charles Deacon, has been made for the month of January, 1903. It shows the expenditures in detail on account of the new improvements ordered by the Board of Trustees and an itemized report of the cost of maintenence. The amount for maintenence amounts to $3,517.13.

The improvements ordered by the Board of Trustees comprise a green house costing $607 10; a milk house, $503.76, and improvements to the basement of the main building amounting to $1,873.47. The improvements on barns, chicken sheds, etc., amounts to $177.02, while $309.42 was spent in remodeling rooms in the main building. For general repairs on buildings $266.59 was expended; $421 was used for the purchase of an iron fence, and the hospital addition, which is still unfinished, called for an expenditure of $3,977.06, all of which to date makes a total, after adding $155.22 for dining-room tables and $286.21 for painting, etc., of $8,576.85.

In addition to the above, $1,220 48 has been spent for other necessary adjuncts to the Home, making a grand total of $9,797 33.

The new addition to the hospital annex will be ready about March 15.

The table supplies during the month of January amounted to $984.44, which makes the aggregate cost per meal per inmate about eight cents.

The average number of inmates during January was 110, and average cost $31.97. Eight were admitted, one vacated, and two died.

The summary of expenditures shows that nearly $1,100 was expended for meats and groceries during the month, while $951.08 was necessary to pay salaries. The sum of $231.50 was paid out in pensions, and $366 for heating and lighting. Books and stationery were purchased to the extent of $121.30, and clothing for inmates cost $108.56, which with other items brought the expense for running the Home during January up to $3,517 13.

The live stock and garden at the Home produced table supplies amounting to $203 51, leaving a net return, after care of same, of $20 93.

The total number of meals served to inmates during the month of January were 10,016, and to the employees 2,225, while 7 meals were served to visitors, making a total of 12,248 meals served during the month.

The report, taken as a whole, reflects great credit on the Superintendent and the Matron, while it shows that the Board of Trustees are awake to the needs of the inmates, and desire to supply every want in the conduct of that excellent institution.

An Error.

It has been asserted that at a recent meeting of the Allied Label League it was reported that the Retail Grocery Clerks' Union had placed the firm of Holmes & Son, grocers and bakers, on the unfair list. This is an error. The firm named is fair to organized labor. It appears that the Grocers' Protective Association has taken some action against Holmes & Son which may account for the rumor. The latter organization has no connection with the trades union movement.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES

Down Town.

Thomas K. McNeir, of Annapolis, Md., paid this office a pleasant visit Wednesday.

A. Riggs Nathan, formerly an employee of the First Division, G. P. O., is now chief of the staff of proofreaders in the State Printing Office at Sacramento, Cal.

"Steve" Caldwell, well known in the G. P. O. and down town, who is now conducting a prosperous business in Albany, N. Y., was a visitor in town last Saturday.

Chinese proverb: "Think of your own faults the first part of the night (when you are awake) and of the faults of others the latter part of the night (when you are asleep).

"Jakey" Atz, one of the best baseball players of the Southern league, will leave town in a few days to join the New Orleans club. Jake refused a very flattering offer from the Boston Nationals for the coming season.

James T. Bresnahan, at one time a compositor in the old Church News office, and later in the cigar business out in the swamp, was in the city last week on a visit. Mr. Bresnahan now holds a responsible position in the Immigration Bureau, being on the staff assigned to revenue cutter service work at the barge office.

At the last regular meeting of the Committee of Arrangements of Columbia Union, No. 101—in charge of preparations for the next I. T. U. Convention in August next—it was decided to invite the members of the Ladies' Auxiliary, the entertainment committee of the Ex-Delegates' Association, and the wives and daughters of such members of No. 101 as desire to take an interest in the coming convention, to meet in conference at Typographical Temple Sunday, March 8, at 3 o'clock, for the purpose of outlining and discussing a plan of entertainment for the Ladies' Auxiliary during convention week.

Nicely furnished rooms, convenient to G. P. O.; bath, gas, and heat. The La Crosse, Fourth and D streets N.W.

First Division.

S. F. McDonough and Louis Vogt are off sick with an attack of la grippe.

Frank J. Sloan and W. H. Bates have been transferred to the State Branch.

George Johnson, jr., returned to work last Monday after a three weeks' spell of sickness.

Glen W. Buckingham was transferred from the "Spess" to this division, Wednesday.

S. A. Plummer has been off sick for some time, but at last reports he was on the mend.

J. Port Stout, who worked in this division about 1883, died last Friday from heart failure.

Robert H. Harstin, late chairman of the "Spess," was reinstated last Friday and assigned to this room.

The bowling club of this division meets every Wednesday evening at 7:30 at the Rathskeller. Everybody invited.

Capt. Jack Robinson refereed the game of basket ball between the Camden (N. J) and the W. L. I. Corps teams on Wednesday evening last.

John Etter, who worked in the "Old Botany Bay" in 1884, paid a visit to this room during the past week. Mr. Etter is now running a daily newspaper in Pennsylvania.

A detail of fourteen compositors and four laborers was made last Saturday. They are to report at 10:30 a. m. and work until 7 p. m. during the remainder of the session of Congress.

Charles Alexander received a letter from Edward ("Fatty") Wentworth, who worked in this division about 1880. Mr. Wentworth is now in Texas, where he has a ranch of 1,200 acres. He wishes to be remembered to all the old timers in the office.

One day last week, in the half hour for luncheon, during a discussion on the tariff, it was claimed that the law of supply and demand regulated it. An attentive listener spoke up and said, "I have heard a great deal about that d——d law and I think it ought to be repealed."

The Grim Destroyer has once more visited this division and removed from our midst T. Howard McGill. Always with a pleasant word and a bright smile, his many redeeming features will long be remembered by his many friends. This is the third death in this division within a year, the other two being John Debus and Frank M. Richardson.

Sidney J. Marshall's novel, "The King of Kor," which has been so long awaited by his many personal friends, has been promised by the printers to be shipped to him to-day and will soon be on sale. A great many copies have been spoken for and it is to be hoped that he will meet with a big success. It is the result of over two years of tireless effort and merits the success he anticipates.

Second Division.

The "get-rich-quick" concern turned out to be not worth a durn.

Ben A. Wolfe was confined to his home a few days on account of a severe cold.

J. A. Phillips has been confined to his home several days on account of sickness.

Mr. W. H. Hickman was on the sick list several days last week, but is back again somewhat improved.

Goldy went on to New York to visit his mother who was sick. During his stay he was taken ill himself.

It would seem to the casual observer that Caeser was not the only great man who had his Brutus. Et tu, Brute!

"Sis" Hopkins, who has been sick for some time, was sent to his home, McEwen, Tenn., Tuesday night. Let us hope he will soon recover.

The "average" strenuous life is beginning to tell on us, as we have had six or seven deaths in our organization during the past six weeks, and we think that is a large average.

In the light of current events it does seem that the line in Midsummer Nights Dream—"What fools these mortals be"—is as true now as when written almost three centuries ago.

It seems that the members of this chapel have had more than their share of sickness during the past month or so. We have had four or five on the sick list, and one death, in our ranks recently.

The many friends of Mr. Shaffer, who was employed in this division last year, and who was a well-known down-town printer, were sorry to hear of his sudden and untimely death. His widow and fatherless children have the sympathy of their many friends in their hour of bereavement.

The many friends of M. W. Hutchinson, who for a long time was an employee of this division, will be sorry to hear of his death, which occurred Saturday, the 21st instant, after an illness of several months. Hutchinson was a quiet, good-natured fellow, and well liked by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. His relatives and friends have the sympathy of all in their bereavement. His remains were taken to Lynchburg, Va., last Sunday for burial.

The friends of our deceased fellow-workmen, M. W. Hutchinson, desire to again express their deep sense of gratitude to the members of this and the Third Division chapel for the prompt and generous manner with which they responded to every call for assistance in his behalf. It is a pleasure to know that he had every comfort he needed, and that everything was done to lessen his burden during his illness. Too much praise cannot be given to his friend and former side-partner in the office, H. Newsom, for his many acts of kindness and attention during his (Hutchinson's) illness.

The twenty-first match game between the two bowling teams of the Second came off February 20, at the Rathskeller. The following is the score:

At a chapel meeting of this division, held Tuesday, the 24th, the following resolutions were introduced and passed unanimously:

WHEREAS, In the death of our fellow-craftsman, Matthew W. Hutchinson, jr., it has pleased an all-wise and Divine Providence to remove from our midst a beloved friend and associate, and we sorrowfully bow in submission to His will; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, who knew him most intimately, ever found him kind, obliging, sincere and courteous, a stanch friend and man of sterling union principles;

Resolved, That our heartfelt sympathy is hereby extended to his bereaved relatives;

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the grief-stricken relatives and that the same be printed in THE TRADES UNIONIST.

Bookbinders' Banquet.

Mirth, melody and good fellowship marked the annual banquet of the bookbinders, held in honor of George Washington's birthday, at Hotel Bessler Saturday night.

One hundred members sat down to a first-class menu, and the boys from the roof garden did justice to it. Mr. Wm. C. Connor was introduced as toastmaster and made the following address:

My Dear Friends and Fellow Bookbinders: As we open the book of fame and look over the names of our great American heroes, we see the name of a man whose birthday we celebrate to-morrow. First in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen—George Washington. We are here to-night to honor his name, the father of our country. We need no searchlight to find out the noble character of this great man who never wavered. When duty called him he obeyed. He loved that flag with its crimson stripes and glittering stars, and he never sheathed his sword until the enemy was driven from his country.

One hundred voices then joined in singing "My Country, 'tis of Thee." A number of humorous telegrams were read. One from police headquarters read: "Wire me at once if you need any stretchers or the patrol. Major Sylvester."

An address was made by Mr. F. F. Bogia.

The following artists assisted at the entertainment: Messrs. Paudert, Hanlon, Pfirman, Gorman, Weston, Murphy, Hofman, Esterly, Hyde, Ed McCarthy, and Hon. Sam Childs, from Baltimore.

The menu was complete in every particular, the card showing that in the selections made the committee knew how to cheer the inner man. The printed menu card was arranged by the committee sufficiently unique to bring out complimentary remarks over the artistic groupings of the German solids and liquids thereon, and aided materially in assisting to a thorough digestion of all its contents.

Great credit is due the committee for the success of the banquet, Messrs. Theo. Hardy, R. F. Stack, T. W. Haslett, and Chas Cassidy, having charge of all the arrangements.

Labor Notes.

Dissatisfaction is reported to exist among the motormen, firemen, guards, and clippers employed on the Manhattan Elevated Railroad on account of wages and hours of work.

At the fifth annual convention of the Illinois State Bottlers' Protective Association and the Interstate Brewers and Bottlers' Association, at Chicago, State associations were formed for all of the Western States.

The Kings County (N. Y.) district of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners have appointed a committee of four to notify the boss carpenters of Kings County that the local unions had decided that from May 1 a union wage scale for the craft of 50 cents an hour would be demanded. The present wage scale is 45 cents an hour.

Chicago brickmakers have voted in favor of an increase in wages, averaging about 2½ cents an hour. The wages at present run from $2 a day to $4.50. No laborer around a brick yard in Cook County receives less than $2 a day, while some of the pieceworkers make as high as $5 for eight hours. There is not a non-union brickmaker in Cook County.

It is stated that a vote will be taken this month by the machinists' unions in Chicago on the question of demanding a 5 per cent increase in wages on May 1. Apprenticeship regulatoins are also to be considered, as well as a recommendation from the district lodge that any member dropped from the rolls for non-payment of dues must pay $25 for reinstatement in the union.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

Charlie Ennis, an officer of the District National Guard, furnished the literary allusions in the menu and programme at their recent annual banquet, which were very pat and received much favorable comment. I am going to copy some of them:

I have only copied enough of the programme to hang Charlie's quotations on, which are remarkably apropos and show the infinite pains he took and the research he made to find them, and that they made a hit shows but a just appreciation. The recitation was by our own Finley Hayes, whose "Handy Andy" skits and snatches we have missed so much in THE TRADES UNIONIST lately.

A friend of mine, a machinist at the Naval Gun Factory (alias Navy-Yard), having achieved a foremanship, severed his connection with his union, giving as a reason that a foreman could not be true to his union and to his employers. I am sure he never gave the matter any deep consideration or he would have reasoned differently. By so doing he indorses as right all that may be obnoxious in a foreman and denounces as wrong the claims of union men. True unionism teaches a man to do an honest day's work for an honest day's pay, and that is all that an honest foreman can ask. A true union man is such from principle, without regard to the effect it may have on his present employment, and would rather give up any situation than his union. A dishonest, driving, grinding foreman is an enemy to his employer, for he drives the best workmen to seek more congenial conditions, only the cringing, worthless element remaining, who are undesirable as employes. I never knew a man who was dishonest toward his union who was not dishonest with his employers and in all his other relations. The true union man, on becoming a foreman, clings all the closer to his union, for then he is in a position to render justice to both parties. True unionism is a deep life principle, as strong in those who have it as belief in God, love for wife and children, filial affection, loyalty to country, and honesty in everyday affairs, and in its assertion the unionist has no regard for immediate apparent personal welfare.

And then went to sleep with a yaughan.

As homeward he stroad,
He sighed for the want of ten centz,

There was a young writer, Clotilde,
Whose ambition's measure was filde
When he ran his knife

And forever his voice he had stilde.

Left him lame as the legs my muse lamestown.

My recent reference to the time when printers wore swords reminds a friend of a unique old character he used to know on the Missouri River Route named Colonel Buzby. The Colonel had a high opinion of the Art Preservative and those who followed it. He thought the only fit garb for a printer was a dress suit, an immaculate expanse of shirt front, and a plug hat, and he always wore them. He thought that in manners the printer should be a Chesterfield, in intellectual attainments a Dr. Johnson, and he was both. For the tourist who rode bumpers or boxcars he had an infinite contempt. When unable to pay car-fare he walked. Along in the later 70's two talented preachers were running a publishing house in Lawrence, Kans. The Colonel was an occasional visitor there on his rounds, and usually found employment, but never showed up again after payday. On one occasion he worked a few days, got paid, and, to the surprise of all, showed up the following Monday. After working an hour or so he put on his coat and went out. Supposing that was the last of him, and his "take" being in a hurry, the foreman told another man to finish it. After setting four or five lines this man looked out of the window and saw the Colonel returning, so he dropped the "take" and went to his own case. When the Colonel went to work again, and saw that some one had been on his "take," he burst out in a shockingly profane tirade of abuse to the ——— blacksmith who had been fooling with his "take," etc. One of the preacher editors happened to be in the room, and rushing over to the Colonel told him they could not have such language there.

"Well, Mr. Preacher, take it to yourself," said the Colonel. "Suppose you are up in your pulpit some fine Sunday morning preaching a d——d fine sermon and all at once you get thirsty and have to go out and get a drink, and while you are practicing before the bar, some d——d blacksmith of a preacher comes along and finishes your sermon. How would you like it?" Saying this, the Colonel put on his coat and hat and left for good, fuming with virtuous indignation.

A circular sent out by the International Eight-Hour Committee, James M. Lynch, chairman, to local eight-hour committees, calls attention to the instructions adopted at the last I. T. U. convention, "That local unions be required to act in conjunction with said committee in furthering its plans, and that they be enjoined from making contracts extending beyond October 1, 1905, which require their members to work more than eight hours per day," gives information as to the progress of the eight-hour agitation and advice as to procedure, part of which is as follows:

Since the eight-hour agitation was launched, many local unions have provided in contracts for the gradual shortening of the hours, and the inauguration of the eight-hour day on October 1, 1905. Other unions have secured promise of the shorter workday on the date specified by the International Typographical Union.

In the making of new contracts in your jurisdiction, effort should be put forth to secure the eight-hour day at once, if possible; if not, the gradual reduction of hours, or the eight-hour day on a specified date not later than October 1, 1905. In this connection, your attention is again directed to that portion of the report of the international president to the Cincinnati convention, treating of the eight-hour day in book and job rooms, which said: "Various methods have been suggested whereby the eight-hour day can be generally put into effect in book and job rooms, and all of these have merit. One of these suggestions which particularly appeals to our members as feasible, and also just to the employers, is that the working day shall be reduced fifteen minutes each year for four years, or until the eight-hour day is an accomplished fact. * * * That the eight-hour day will eventually be established as the maximum for our entire membership goes without challenge. We trust that it may come peaceably; in any event, come it must."

Local eight-hour committees must be guided largely by local conditions. In a sense, the achievement of the shorter workday is a local question. If opportunity presents itself, make the most of it. Hold frequent committee meetings, and discuss ways and means to achieve the desired end. That which may seem an impossibility now will become a reality through energetic, constant and intelligent effort.

I don't think it is right to let this batch go in without a single reminiscence. When I went to Topeka to finish my apprenticeship in the State Record office the firm was S. D. Macdonald & Co., the "Co." being Mr. F. P. Baker, who is now a subpostmaster at Topeka, nearly 90 years old, and almost blind. Subsequently Mr. Macdonald retired from the firm and I believe worked at the case almost all the time until his death, though a wealthy man. When we worked together in 1870 he owned the building we worked in. At his death, two or three years ago, he was away over 80. I remember a circumstance that happened when I was an apprentice in which the late Captain Dunlap was concerned. The Captain was then publishing the Daily Tribune, across an alley from the State Record. Macdonald clipped a "squib" that was then running the rounds, about like this:

"Boss," said the journeyman, "I would like to have 50 cents to-day."

"James," replied the editor, "haven't I told you before that when you want a large sum like that you must give me several days' notice?"

To which Mac added the following:

This is said to have occurred in the office across the way.

Captain Dunlap was furious when the paper came out, and all sorts of apologies had to be made to appease him. The Captain mentioned the matter to me within the past five years, showing that it still rankled in him.

If Mr. Carroll D. Wright is to relinquish the Commissionership of Labor on its absorption by the Department of Commerce and Labor, as I hear, why should not a real representative of organized labor be appointed Chief of the new Bureau of Labor? The only "labor" that will have consideration at the hands of the new Bureau will be the "organized" article, for unorganized labor would have no one to speak for it or represent its wants, and as an entity it has no real existence. We want a man who can have the indorsement of Mr. Gompers, Mr. Mitchell, and other well recognized exponents of the rights of labor—a forceful, fearless, able man, who will make the new Bureau of real value to us, which the old one never was, but a mere office for the compiling of statistics. Let us have immediate action.

A recent letter to me from William S. Waudby, special agent of the Bureau of Labor, at Rochester, N. Y., states that he and Mrs. W. will be in Washington during the convention next August. He has not been here for quite a while. Mr. Waudby will have an interesting article on "Child Labor" in the April number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, illustrated with photographic views. He says: "You lost a good man in the death of Bill Collins—he 'sure was a white man.'" Mr. Waudby is doing much writing on labor matters and his work is always clear, forcible, and exhaustive.

Tom Jacobs, of the Post, will see that anything contributed to the old man gets to him. "The poor ye have always with you." This may not be correctly quoted, but the sentiment is one worth remembering when the yellow bills are rubbing against each other in your pocket.

According to reports, a joint board of appeals has been formed among the printing trades of the country. In all probability the personnel of the body will be made up of the president of the international organization of printers, bookbinders, electrotypers, and stereotypers, and printing pressmen and assistants. As in the past, each organization composing the board will have complete autonomy over its own affairs. All disputes arising between the organizations named will be submitted to the board of adjustment.

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 1903.

Announcement.

We desire to announce that the business formerly conducted under the firm name of PATTON & HUBBARD has been taken over by The Trades Unionist Publishing Company. In effect there is no material change as the business will be conducted on the same basis as before.

Owing to failing health Mr. A. J. E. HUBBARD has been compelled to leave for the West, temporarily we hope. In his absence Mr. T. M. RING will assume his duties in the office and is authorized to do business for the company.

LAST Sunday's Post was particularly good in every respect, but the reader that failed to read "Colonel Monroe" missed a treat.

THE proposed strike of firemen and trainmen on the Wabash system has received a check by the injunction route. Judge ADAMS, of the United States District Court, at St. Louis, has commanded them that "until further order of the court [they] absolutely desist and refrain from in any way or manner ordering, coercing, persuading, inducing, or otherwise causing, directly or indirectly, the employes of the said Wabash Railway Company to strike or quit the service of said company." The Brotherhood of Engineers and the Order of Railway Conductors' refusal to join with the firemen and trainmen weakened the effect of the proposed strike and encouraged the management in their determination to resist the demands of the Brotherhood of Firemen and the trainmen. Just how far the injunction will affect the general result is problematical, as the mere stopping from work can not be construed as a violation of the injunction.

Labor Should Be Recognized.

In the appointment of an Assistant Secretary having charge of what is now known as the Labor Bureau to be merged into the Department of Commerce and Labor, the President will be asked to recognize organized labor in the appointment of the head of the new division that assumes the work of the Labor Bureau. It is understood that the present head of the Labor Bureau, CARROLL D. WRIGHT, intends shortly to accept a position tendered him in an Eastern college, and for which he is well adapted from his intimate associations with the subjects he will be called upon to teach, due to his long service at the head of the Labor Bureau. This leaves the President a free hand in his choice, and it is hoped that he will use his usual good judgment in the selection of a man who will at once be a practical and an enthusiastic friend of labor. To do otherwise would but clearly emphasize the objection that was raised against the merging of the Labor Bureau into a department where the interests of labor would be subordinated or at best receive but passing recognition at the hands of a theorist and a weak supporter of the many questions that are presented for solution through that bureau.

In this connection it is not the desire of those who are directly interested in this matter to advance the interest of any candidate, but to point out the necessity of a careful selection by the President to a position of such great importance to over a million and a half members of organized labor.

The immediate fate of the workingman depends upon the maintenance of old-fashioned unionism. The time when altruism will prevail universally is a long way in the future. To keep wages high here and now will be the chief work of labor organizations for a long time to come. Nor is this a sordid way of looking at the matter. High wages mean healthier living; healthier living means higher thinking; higher thinking means progress toward the golden age for which humanity still gropingly seeks. From this point of view socialism is not a misleading light. The fundamental fact is recognized that the progress of mankind has been upward from the lawless individuality of the savage along essentially socialistic lines. The truth is likewise recognized that the height to which human institutions may safely and profitably rise above average human intelligence has its limit. As the hero of "Locksley Hall" remarks, "Science moves but slowly, slowly, creaping on from point to point."

JUST EVEBY-DAY LIFE.

Director Merriam, in a circular letter to the correspondents, announces that the bulletins to appear during the coming year will present statistics relating to street railways, electric light and power, mines and mining, and will include further analysis and discussion of the figures already published in the reports of the Twelfth Census. Among subjects on which bulletins are to be issued later, as soon as the preparatory inquiries are completed, are wealth, debt, and taxation; social statistics; and crime, pauperism, and benevolence. It is the desire of the Census Office to distribute these bulletins without waste, by placing them where they will be of genuine service, as a source of quotation and comment, for purposes of reference and instruction, or for commercial and scientific information.

Here's one I weave into a magazine story:

When I'm a politician and little known to fame,
But just a politician and in it for the game,
I'll summons all me friends around, to come from near and far,
To see them push me money back—back across the bar.

When I have climbed to heights of fame upon an actor's part,
And proven I'm a master of the histrionic art,
I'll own the lower section of a Pullman palace car—
And then they'll push me money back—back across the bar.

And when I challenge old John L. and others of renown,
And learning them a trick or two, I knock the sluggers down,
I'll wear the belt and honors of a pugilistic star—
And then they'll push me money back—back across the bar.

When I'm a sinking derelict upon life's troubled sea,
Such touching little favors they ne'er will grant to me,
They'll make the sledding rocky and all me pleasures mar—
And they'll never push me money back—back across the bar.

This is the way it comes over from the next alley: "You see, we had just left the water tank and were whooping it up pretty lively, when the brakeman comes along"—and "Bill proofs!" from the desk interrupts the story.

If a man has plenty of money his fool remarks are considered witty.

Some women seem to think their husbands are made of gold dust.

The less faith a man has in himself the more explaining he has to do.

Some men find it easier to raise whiskers than the price of a shave.

In visiting places of interest in a large city don't overlook the pawnshops.

Most men can stand a disappointment in love better than the loss of a dollar.

A diplomat is a man who knows how to get what he wants without fighting for it.

When a pretty girl stares at a man's feet he feels as if he had no earthly use for himself.

Women who like to talk about the sexes dislike to admit that they have to work for a living.

A Bad Joke's Age.

Baltimore American.

Noah was standing on his front stoop looking at the waterscape.

He had been sounding as if he intended weighing anchor.

But Shem had misplaced the steelyards.

So he kept right on sounding that way while the boys sought the missing article.

Suddenly the patriarch saw a head bobbing about in the turbid tide.

Pity filled the heart of the veteran navigator.

Making ready a rope, he stood to throw it as soon as the head might draw near enough.

Skillfully throwing the noose he encircled the form that buffeted with the waves.

As the man was pulled in, hand over hand, he blew the water out of his mouth and, with a vapid grin, cried out:

"Looks a little bit like it might rain—ha, ha!"

And Noah cut the rope.

As he watched the bubbles come up from the place where the joker had gone down, he murmured:

"I wouldn't have anybody on this trip who would get off such an old one as that!"

LOS ANGELES "TIMES" FIGHT.

Missionary Work Needed to Bring Some Advertisers to Terms.

While many advertisers have responded to the solicitation of organized labor and withdrawn their patronage from the notorious scab Los Angeles Times since the fight has been inaugurated against that paper, yet several advertisers positively refuse to quit helping the Times. Following is a list of advertisers who have spurned the requests of organized labor:

"Cuticura"—Potter Drug and Chemical Corporation, Boston, Mass.

Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Co., Racine, Wis. (Box 636).

Duffy's Malt Whisky Co., Rochester, N. Y.

"Force"—The Force Food Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

"H.-O."—Hornby Oatmeal Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

"Postum"—Postum Cereal Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"Paine's Celery Compound"—Col. F. B. Stevens, Globe Bldg., Boston, Mass.

"Peruna"—Peruna Medical Co., Columbus, Ohio.

"Herpicide Dandruff Cure"—The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

"Wilson Whisky"—Wilson Distilling Co., 100 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

Will YOU write letters to all of the above as well as withhold your patronage until such time as their advertisements are withdrawn from the Times? This line of work has resulted in sixty-seven (more than three-fourths) of the "foreign" advertisers in the Times withdrawing their patronage from that paper, as they soon tire of the constant bombardment of letters.

This will cost you ten 2-cent stamps. Will YOU spend this amount to defeat the worst enemy organized labor has ever had?

I. T. U. Eight-Hour Committee.

The I. T. U. Eight-Hour Committee is diligently at work encouraging the local committees to renewed effort. In a circular just issued it is earnestly requested in making new contracts under the local scales that efforts should be made to secure recognition of the eight-hour day or a gradual shortening of the present working day in order to secure the eight-hour day by October 1, 1905. The committee further urge the holding of meetings frequently and to endeavor to create a healthy sentiment in the inauguration of the shorter workday.

THE PATH OF THE LILY.

Born in the midst of storm and strife,
Bathed in the tide of passion's sea;
The untried soul knows naught of life
Nor lists to the tale of Eden's tree.

Christ trod the path of the lily white;
In the blood-red tide of passion, He Walked unscathed with a soul of might,
Tho' oft, perchance, 'twas wearily.

Trod in the path of the lily pure,
Bearing aloft the wand of peace,
Mary, the Magdalen, was strong to endure,
And of passion's sweet lure she had surcease.

When the path of the lily He bade her tread—
The snow-white lily, not passion's flower—
Rich-perfumed petal, the rose of red
Which lives to enchant in beauty's bower.

The serene lily, with saintly perfume,
Attracts when the soul, weary and crushed,
Groping its path of age-long doom,
Arises, anon, its turmoil hushed.

—O. W. HUMPHREY.

THEIR TROUBLES.

As the shades of night have gathered,
And the "night-print" working hard
Picking up the little "picklets"
That was "cased" by his "day-pard;"
Now and then, amid the silence,
Comes a groan, sometimes a yell,
As the night-man loudly bellows:
"I wish my day-man was in h—l."

And the day-man has his troubles,
As he comes at early day;
Finds his case picked to the bottom,
What think you he'd like to say?
So, he gently hides his feelings—
As he works hard, it is true;
But he meekly prays each evening—
That the night-man goes there too.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

The ponies on March 23.

Why not elect one of the lady members a delegate to the I. T. U.?

Hofber, the biggest printer in the country, is working on the Post.

D. L. Sando, a Merg. operator on the Post, has returned from a visit to Cincinnati.

John C. Macksey, of the Times, contemplates a trip to the Pacific Coast in the near future.

Bates, Nelgner, and Stratton are in the race for delegate from the G. P. O. M. J. Maher, of the Star, would be a hard one to catch as a down town candidate if he starts.

James J. Cooney, formerly of the First Division, G. P. O., is now practicing law in Philadelphia, having been admitted to practice in that city. His many friends here wish him success.

We are in receipt from the Tri-City Typographical Social Club, comprising the workers in the printing trade in the cities of Scranton, Wilkes-Barre, and Pittston, Pa., an elaborately printed menu card of the annual banquet of that organization. It is neatly arranged and reflects credit on the printer for simplicity in design and taste in execution.

Robert Sanford, a steam fitter's helper employed on the addition to Woodward & Lothrop's department store, had a narrow escape from death on Tuesday night. He was at work when he fell a distance of 35 feet. He was taken to the Emergency Hospital, where it was found he had severly injured his back and had a scalp wound. He insisted on going home when he regained consciousness.

First Division.

When Congress adjourns
And springtime returns,
For which we are all wishing,
The days will grow hazy,
The boys will grow lazy
And lose lots of time in fishing.

All the fellows will grieve
Who have used up their leave
And swear they won't do it again,
But we know every spring
They say the same thing
And make that promise in vain.

Louis Vogt, who has been sick for the past two weeks, returned to work Tuesday.

Messrs. Pollock, McDonald, Harstin, and Ruddach were transferred to the "Spess" last week.

Charles E. Groome received the gold medal last Monday that he won last year in the May contest at the range of the National Guard.

W. E. Cobb won the watch that was raffled off by Mr. Boss, of the Fifth Division. This makes the second prize won by Mr. Cobb during the past year.

Messrs. Plummer, Ames, and McDonough, who have been off with the la grippe, returned to work during the past week.

J. P. (Tony) Garner has announced his intention of running for delegate this year. Mr. Garner has been a continuous member of this Union since 1870 and has held many responsible positions in the Union.

There will be a bowling contest for the championship of the First and Second Divisions, Saturday night, between Judge Mabrey, of the First, with a record of 87, and J. S. Garner, of the Second, with a record of 86.

Those individuals who are lending out their money under the pretext that it is symposium funds, and collecting the "sym" rate of interest, are violating an I. T. U. law and are liable to prosecution. The secretaries of the various "syms" are on to them.

George H. Ball had a very painful accident last week. While cutting a piece of lead he got his finger in the place where the lead should have been, and in consequence he is now nursing a very bad finger. Through the kindness of Murray Hackett, who went back to the case, he is running out proofs in the correcting alley.

Alley 19 of this division, composed of Messrs. Mabrey, King, Garner, McDonough, and Nachman, hereby challenge any alley in this or any other division to a bowling contest for the championship of the G. P. O. The only condition insisted upon is that the opposing team must all work together in the same alley. Communications may be sent to Judge Mabrey, this division.

CLOTILDE.

Second Division.

Delahunty has returned to "the mines" again. Cheer up, John.

"Admiral Dewey" Drake, our medicine man," has developed into a first-class "black" man.

J. A. Phillips, our superior man, has returned to work after being absent several days on account of sickness.

We had an addition to our force during the past week in the person of J. W. Belcher, of Rhode Island, who received a probationary appointment.

We have the best bowling team in the office. Each game shows marked improvement. Keep it up. We think it is the most healthy game one can indulge in.

Candidates for delegate are beginning to show up. Frank Bates, our popular Sergeant-at-Arms, has put out his sign. Bates is a jolly good fellow and deserves to win.

Mr. Brown, our accommodating title-page artist, was called home one day last week on account of the illness of his wife. He reports that she is now convalescing.

In expressing gratitude to all who responded so generously to every call for assistance to aid our deceased fellow-workman, W. M. Hutcheson, Jr., we unintentionally omitted the First and Fourth divisions, both of whom, we have since learned, responded liberally. Many thanks to all.

The many temporary employes of the office had their fondest expectations nipped in the bud by the reversal by the Supreme Court of the United States of the decision rendered by the Court of Claims in their favor sometime ago. The following lines seem to express their sentiments:

We have been to the funeral of all our hopes,
And entombed them one by one;
Not a word was said
Not a tear was shed
When the mournful task was done.

We agree with the proprietors of THE TRADES UNIONIST so far as using its columns as a vehicle of personal abuse is concerned. We have tried not to say anything of an insulting or abusive nature. We have never written anything which we did not honestly believe at the time of writing that the statement was true. Of course we have made mistakes. We can not always have an affidavit for everything we write. If we have written anything in this column which has had a tendency to "grate harshly on our readers' nervous sensibilities" we assure them it was wholly unintentional.

The twenty-second match game between the two bowling teams of this division came of February 27, at the Rathskeller. The following is the score:

RICHARDS' TEAM.	First game.	Sec'nd game.	Third game.	Total.
Richards	175	160	180	515

The Electrical Workers.

Local No. 26, of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, will give an entertainment at Masonic Temple on March 11. Among the talent in the entertainment will be some of the best performers from the Empire Vaudeville Co., consisting of Jas. E. Bond, tramp pianist; Dick Smith; Olanda, the gymnast; Milton Clark, the whistler and monologist; the four Delrays in tumbling; the Empire Comedy Four, and the trick dogs Yankee and Dixie.

The entertainment will conclude with a dance from 10 p. m. to 1 a. m.

This will be an enjoyable occasion and the remarkable price of 25 cents is all that will be charged for the entertainment and dance.

A Social Event.

The dramatic club which recently gave a performance at the late entertainment of the Bookbinders' Union, entitled "A Night on the Lawn," entertained the members of the company at a banquet given at Freund's on Monday night. During an evening that was replete with wit and humor the guests were treated to a form of entertainment that combined at once an appeal to the intellectual and material sense. For his able and untiring efforts in behalf of the success of the club, Mr. Chas. W. Weston was presented with a handsome Morris chair.

Shirt and Collar Firms Unfair.

The Shirt, Waist, and Laundry Workers have issued a circular calling attention to the fact that the product of Cluett, Peabody & Co., United Shirt and Collar Co., and Van Zandt, Jacobs & Co., all of Troy, N. Y., should be refused on account of the attitude of these firms to organized labor since the strike and lockout of June, 1901. The dealers mentioned sell the following brand of shirts: Monarch, Lion, Club, United States, and Target. Collars and cuffs with the brand of Arrow, Oriental, Ivy Leaf, Twentieth Century, Single Triangle, Double Triangle, Lion, and United States should be also refused.

Mr. H. B. Parker.

The many friends of Harry B. Parker, the senior member of the firm of Parker, Bridget & Co., will be pleased to learn that he is slowly recovering from the severe stroke of paralysis he suffered last Saturday night at his place of business. Mr. Parker is well known in the business world, having been over twenty years continuously in the clothing and furnishing business in this city. He has a host of friends, who will all feel gratified to learn of his chance of complete recovery.

Bindery Notes.

Eddie Fuhrman is awaiting congratulations. It's a boy.

Jim McDonald's tonsorial feats are the talk and admiration of the bindery.

Johnny Burns is no longer called "Shad." His new title is "Corn Beef and Cabbage.

Goldthwaite attended a ball the other night at which there were 100 ladies and 1,000 gentlemen. Goldy's ticket was No. 999.

Charley Cassidy thinks that the theatrical performances in this city are entirely too short. Up at Albany he used to bring his cot in with him.

With the incoming of the Lenten season the water wagon is becoming uncomfortably crowded. There are a few irreconcilables, however.

Harry Bassett is training under Jim Nalley, and when Jim gets him down to Harry Willis' size he proposes to match them in a boxing bout.

The Major has been receiving rewards from unexpected sources during the week. He came to the center nobly and sent Mike a job of quartos.

The Boston boys say a great change has come over McCarthy since he left Boston. Up there he was known as "Bugs" and "Bones" McCarthy, but now he is called "Professor."

Editor Feeney, of the International Bookbinder, has the distinction of having been "mentioned" for the position of Assistant Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor.

In the death of William Gilliard the bindery loses one of its most faithful workmen. "Gilly" possessed a keen sense of humor, which was unsuspected by many, owing to his rather solemn exterior."

The following communication was received and ordered printed:

TROY, N. Y., February 20, 1903.

To Organized Labor, Greeting:

It has been brought to our attention that the shirt firms which are on the A. F. of L. unfair list are making statements to the effect that their difficulties with organized labor have been adjusted and that all employees are members of the union.

These statements are simply made to sell goods, and therefore should be branded as false and retailers friendly to labor notified of the fact, for there are over 150 operators and cutters still out of work who are on the blacklist of the companies mentioned, and have been unable to secure work ever since the disastrous strike and lockout of June, 1901.

Retailers in your city are boldly displaying unfair shirts, collars, and cuffs in their windows, and these manufacturers themselves assert that the boycott has had no effect on them; in fact, that they are gaining trade; and, therefore, we again appeal to you and request that you refuse to buy goods of any retailer who handles the Lion, United, Club, Target, and the Monarch brand of shirts, or the Arrow, Oriental, Ivy Leaf, Twentieth Century, Single and Double Triangle, and the Lion and U. S. brand of collars and cuffs.

The A. F. of L. at its last convention indorsed our action, and it is the duty of every member of organized labor to lend their aid in our fight, and to demand the Union Label whenever purchasing shirts, waists, collars, and cuffs, and remember that the Shirt, Waist, and Laundry Workers' Union Label is the only one to be recognized on these articles.

Do not patronize retailers who sell unfair goods made by Cluett, Peabody & Co., United Shirt and Collar Co., Van Zandt, Jacobs & Co.

Trusting you will give us the assistance required, we are

Fraternally, yours,
S. W. AND L. W. I. U.

Referred to Label Committee.

REPORTS OF DELEGATES.

Retail Clerks' Union, No. 533, requested that the name of I. Grosner be taken from the unfair list. Granted.

Paperhangers' Union, No. 420, reported that any member of that union who patronizes any business house published as unfair by the Central Labor Union will be fined $5 for each offense.

Brewery Workmen's Union, No. 118, presented the new contract of that union for ratification by the Central Labor Union. The Contract Committee reporting favorably, the contract was indorsed.

SPECIAL COMMITTEES.

The committee appointed to report to the Council its construction of Article III, section 1, having made its report, the Council accepted the construction as placed on the article and section by the committee. Delegate Spohn desired to be recorded as voting in the negative on the report made by the committee.

The Vienna Cafe.

In the list of places using the product of the Sharon Dairy, owned by Corbett Thompson, the Vienna Cafe was included in our issue of last week. Mr. C. S. Campbell, the owner of the Vienna Cafe, states that he was not solicited by the officers of Milk Wagon Drivers' Union to refrain from using the Sharon Dairy milk and cream. Had they done so his place would not have been on the list. The Vienna Cafe is no longer using Sharon Dairy milk or cream and we desire to give this item as much publicity as possible.

F. S. Clinton's Interesting Letter of Phoenix as a Health Resort.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

It is considered good form by many who go to pleasure or health resorts to write home to the local paper and let friends know that they are actually there. On the strength of this custom, I send a few lines, and hope this communication may be interesting to all who read it and benefit many who may intend coming to Phoenix for their health.

Phoenix, according to the last census, has a population of 5,544 legal residents. Added to this are the temporary residents, amounting to 10,000 or 12,000 more, nearly all health seekers. Prices for the privilege of living here and struggling to get a fresh breath of air and such other things as are necessary to sustain life are full grown and have whiskers. The legal residents live off the health seeker and the fortunate gambler. The best citizens of Phoenix encourage the health seeker to locate here, while gambling is wide open in the town.

On Sunday you can hear the word of God preached with one ear and the rattle of dice and the whirl of the roulette wheel with the other. Decency, morality, and sanitary conditions have been laid aside that the mighty dollar can have the fullest opportunity to increase and circulate.

A circular of the health officer of Phoenix is posted throughout the city. Paragraph 4 says: "It is the history of all places resorted to by tubercular patients that eventually the residents nearly all become affected by it."

It is so hot and dry here that you can truthfully say, "But I have heard of another place that has the reputation of being hot and dry." As a health resort, I think the other place would compare very favorably with Phoenix. One advantage the other place has is a more even temperature. The sudden changes in Phoenix between day and night is enough to knock out a well man. Invalids are not allowed out after sundown. The rule is light clothing during the day and overcoats and furs mornings and evenings. I have been unable to find any person who has been cured of tuberculosis. Bronchitis, catarrh, weak lungs, and throat troubles are helped, and in some instances cured, but you have to stay here as a general thing to keep what you have gained. This information I have learned after two weeks' careful inquiry from the most reliable sources possible—old residents and members of the army of consumptives, who are called "lungers," and have been here for years, some of them, and others who have tried everything and every plan. It is almost conceded that as a beneficial consumption resort Phoenix now ranks last. The place to go is where there is no consumption, and if you have any chance at all you will get well. It is so hot here in the summer that it is impossible for strangers to stand it out doors, and thousands who are able to go to the mountains during the hot period. The city has but few, if any, attractive features. The State House is quite a fine building and the grounds are laid out very nicely. The season is back here as much as in Washington, so Nature is doing nothing to please the eye or soothe the mind. The ground on which the city is built is perfectly level, and, there being no rain scarcely, dust cuts a large figure in Arizona life. The city consists practically of one street—Washington—although streets branching from it have some business. We have a salt or alkali water works and an electric car line, with a propensity to take you three or four miles from where you belong and break down. The inhabitants are Americans, Indians, Mexicans, and Chinese. Fifty per cent of the buildings are hotels or so-called sanitariums. Everything necessary to make life comfortable can be bought here. All articles are high, grade and price. They have the finest of carriages, automobiles, and bicycles. Everybody rides something. Women and girls ride horses astride, and it is really one of the least objectionable customs in the city, as their appearance is not immodest, and all I have seen riding, young or old, are the picture of robust health. But for every well person you see two sick ones. In some of the parks and the sanitarium sitting rooms you can see the most disheartened, discouraged, and God-forsaken looking people on earth. This class, of course, have given up all hope of recovery. All conversations that a "lunger" can get into are on sickness; who died last night; who is getting worse, and "Billie" wont last much longer, etc. With a sick person, who is not able to get the best of care and other things necessary for their comfort, Phoenix is about as cheerful as a burial vault in a cemetery. I refrain from giving the worst features of the place for personal reasons. I was well posted on what to expect here. The porters, train boys, brakemen, and conductors gave me "straight goods" as to what to expect. Of course they may have been a little reckless with their figures, but they told me that 50 per cent more came out here than ever came back, and the majority of those that returned were worse than when they came out. Skeptical people can come here and buy experience. Washington, D. C., and thousands of other places in the East, with proper care and conditions, is better for you than Phoenix, Arizona, sick or well.

Bindery Notes.

Harry Ashton was a very busy man at the last meeting.

"Bobby" Gaylor, of the roof garden, is not on the water wagon as reported.

R. B. Macdonald has resigned and will leave to take charge of his brother's estate.

Kearney's friend Corbin expects to give him a large order for pigs this spring.

The parachute jumper on the Bindery floor is now quiet. He thinks he is a wonder.

Jack Atkins and Charlie Cassidy are looking fine since they joined the blue ribbons.

James L. Feeney is now a member of tne Order of Eagles. Jim likes to be with the strong birds.

The well-known orator, Mike Dunn, held forth in his inimitable manner at the last meeting. There are no prunes in Mike's mouth when he takes the floor.

Adam Sommers was called to New York City to take a place in the customs service. He declined the position, preferring to work at the art of bookbinding.

Wm. C. Connor attends lectures on wireless telegraphy. He expects to be able in a short time to send messages on the ether waves to a lady friend some distance from the Capitol.

The Washington Post correspondent who visited New York City and could find no one that could speak English must have lived in Chinatown when stopping in the Empire City. I suggest that he return at once to Foggy Bottom.

JOHN HENRY BONER.

Death of the Noted Printer, Proofreader, and Author.

Last Friday night, about 9.30 o'clock, after a long affliction by that dread disease, consumption, John Henry Boner passed away, at the age of 58 years.

Mr. Boner was born January 31, 1845, in Salem, N. C., where he was first instructed in the printer's art, and where, as well as in Asheville, same State, he, for a time edited weekly papers; in 1868 he was reading clerk of the North Carolina Constitutional Convention and in 1869 70 was chief clerk of the lower house of the State Legislature. After coming to this city he was for a time a compositor, and about 1880 he became a proofreader, in which position he acquitted himself with entire satisfaction to his superiors,

About 1886 he was discharged, with many others, on a change of administration, and went to New York City, where he remained about fourteen years. He was one of the editors of Century Dictionary, American Literature, Standard Dictionary, Appleton's Encyclopedia, and literary editor of the World. He purchased a residence on Staten Island, but ill health compelled him to relinquish it. Returning to this city three or four years ago, he was reinstated in his old position, but his physical condition was such that he was able to work but a small part of the time.

About twenty years ago Mr. Boner published a volume of poems, which brought him to the attention of the literary celebrities, especially Mr. E. C. Stedman, whose friendship was of great service to him in New York. His poems, most of them short, but one or two of them more pretentious in length and theme, were published under the title, "Whispering Pines," a conceit born of recollections of his North Carolina home. Among poems which he has produced since are "Poe's Cottage at Fordham," published in the Century Magazine, and "The Wolf at the Door," the latter copied into THE TRADES UNIONIST, and supposed to have been inspired by his Staten Island experience, by which he lost his home. The latter poem was one of the most felicitous of the many products of his facile pen.

Though not especially active in union matters, Mr. Boner was elected President of Columbia Union, No. 101, in 1878, in which position he showed executive ability and a thorough knowledge of parliamentary practice, and he gave the union a conservative, safe administration.

Mr. Boner had a large fund of dry humor in him, and joking with his fellow-workmen was a daily pastime, more especially before his health failed, though even his physical afflictions could not prevent his looking at the ludicrous side of things. A favorite joke with him was to tell some old chestnut, with gravest face and most solemn mien, as having happened to himself the evening before. One in particular was this:

"I was out dining with a friend of mine last evening. My friend has a most interesting little daughter, and as we sat down at the table she said:

"'Mr. Boner, I want to see you drink.'

"'Why, my little dear,' I asked, 'do you wish to see me drink?'

"'Why, papa says you drink like a fish.'"

This story he would tell day after day, with a different introduction each time, so that no one could tell what was coming till he was at the point.

When he left this city for New York he went into the office to bid his old friends goodby, saying as he gave them the last handshake:

"Goodby, boys, goodby! I know Hungry Joe will get me before I reach Broadway."

("Hungry Joe" was a then famous New York confidence man.)

A few days later a cheery letter came from him:

"I feel quite at home in New York. It reminds me so much of Raleigh!"

Poor Boner has left us, but the memory of his geniality, good nature, happy disposition, and his uncomplaining suffering will long remain with us.

He was buried on Monday, in Congressional Cemetery, with simple unostentation, as he had requested. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. H. Amos, of the North Capitol M. E. Church, and the pall-bearers were Messrs. A. G Heaton, Marcus Benjamin, Charles M. Robinson, Wm. L. Schmalhoff, Charles W. Otis, and Leonard Koon.

He leaves a widow, herself in bad health, to mourn his decease, and countless friends here and wherever else he has lived.

A. F. BLOOMER.

Fifth Division.

David L. Mackley is on the sick list.

John Henry Boner's poems have been placed on sale in this division for the benefit of his widow.

F. E. Klopfer is quarantined on account of diphtheria in his family. He lost a little daughter last week.

P. M. McCallum, W. H. Van Bibber, and Frank Lloyd have returned to their cases, the work on the "Y" having settled down to its normal condition.

R. A. Nelgner was transferred from the Third Division Night, or remnant-rock end of the Bill Force, where the typos were ever watchful for the end pieces.

James Morrow was confined to his room with a severe cold. The solicitude of the "alley" for his welfare was such that he will have enough prescriptions for a year.

W. C. Crowther was transferred from the Night Bill Force last Friday and was assigned to slug 1. Mr. Crowther formerly lived in Baltimore, where he owned a job printing office.

Grant E. Price unfortunately found it necessary to go to California for his health, L. D. Weeks resuming the responsibilities at the bank. Mr. Price went by way of New Orleans, and last reports left him safely in New Mexico.

Our inimitable Simon Pocher has a dead cinch on good luck now. He put his shirt on wrong side out in the morning by mistake, and would not change it after discovering his error. He says it is a sure sign of luck coming his way.

John Sherman offers a reward for information leading to the detection of the artist who adorned the strippers' bank with a framed free-hand drawing of an exciting incident in a wild (?) turkey hunt in which Mr. Sherman took part.

The Fifth Division force will become proficient in foreign languages in the near future. The way that Spanish, French, German, Scandinavian, and other languages, including the various dialects of Indian, is handled shows that we are making a remarkable stride in the mastery of the languages of the Old World.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

"The winter before Oklahoma was opened to settlement—1889-1890, I think it was," said 'Gene Andrew, the other night—"all Southern Kansas was filled up with prospective settlers, waiting for the opening. One would be surprised at the number of printers among these people. Wichita was full of them. This was after the palmy 'Indian' days in Wichita, and work was dull, with the largest number of subs on record. One cold winter's night a lot of disappointed subs, after 'showing up' on the Eagle, were holding a session in the Eagle press room, when an oiler came in and told a grewsome story of a haunted house in his neighborhood. He said the house was vacant, and that at midnight each night clanking chains could be heard and sulphurous lights seen, and a lot more. As the gang did not object to spirits, a party was organized for that night to investigate. We walked fully 25 blocks in the cold and saw nothing. It was simply a fraud. In the crowd was a genius named Will Phillips, of Kokomo, Ind., more commonly known as 'Truthful Phillips'—this by way of sarcasm. As we were walking back to town Phillips got up a scheme to organize a party for the next night and induce some of the bloated case-holders to go, and incidentally give several subs a chance to get in a night to leave town on. Next day we all told a great tale about what we had seen, especially 'Truthful,' and the ghost party became the one theme; but as the regulars were skeptical, and Phillips hunted up a reporter for an afternoon sheet—the Beacon—and filled him full of wind, with the result that a large write-up of the whole alleged experience appeared under big head lines. After this no one was skeptical, and subs 'caught on' at a great rate, with the result that from a subs' party it became a regulars' party. Well, it rained, sleeted, and did several things that night, but they went, and got back to the office about 2 a. m. the wettest, coldest, muddiest lot of men in Kansas. They were so mad that they held a meeting and boycotted every man in the ghost party of the previous night, but most of us 'cashed in' our day and left anyhow."

The resolutions on the death of the late Chief Clerk William H. Collins, passed by the Proof Room, First and Second Division, and Record chapels, have been magnificently engrossed by Mr. J. W. Swank, who has probably no superior anywhere as a penman. The work covers fourteen sheets, the first being "In Memoriam," with a spray of flowers, the lettering throughout being the equal of any engraving. On the second page is a pen portrait of Mr. Collins, pronounced by good judges to be superior to the photograph from which it was copied. At the end of all is a closed book, with a rose lying on it, and surrounded by other flowers. Mr. E. H. Thomas, the chairman of the committee of the several chapels, has had charge of the work, which is now being bound in keeping with the artistic merit of the penwork, and he selected the following poetic extracts, which are embodied in the book, the peculiar appropriateness of which is recognized by all:

He did not fall
Like drooping flowers that no man noticeth,
But, like a great branch of some stately tree,
Bent in a tempest and flung down to death.

Formed on the good old plan—
A true, a brave, a downright honest man.
He blew no trumpet in the market place,
Nor in the church, with hypocritic face,
Supplied with cant the lack of Christian grace.
Loathing pretense, he did with cheerful will
What others talked of while their hands were still.

His years not long, but his experience old;
His head unmellow'd, but his judgment ripe;
And, in a word (for far behind his worth
Come all the praises that I now bestow),
He was complete in feature and in mind,
With all good grace to grace a gentleman.

We will shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the sweetest gift God gives His friend,
And that sometimes this sable pall of death
Conceals the fairest boon His love can send.

But not to-day; then be content, sad heart!
God's plans, like lilies, pure and white, unfold.
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart;
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold.

And if, through patient toil, we reach the land
Where tired feet, with sandals loosed, may rest,
When we shall clearly know and understand,
I think that we will say, "God knew best."

I judge from a remark by my friend "S. M. S." that he wanted to roast somebody and got shut off. That's best, dear boy; because the other fellow can roast, too, and that's uncomfortable. "Ven ve hunt ze tigare, zat is ze grande sport; but ven ze tigare hunt us, —— ——!"

I have received from Topeka, Kans., a copy of a bill of the State Legislature, the title of which reads as follows:

Senate Bill No. 708. By Senator Noftzger.

AN ACT

To establish a State Zoological Garden at the city of Lawrence; to create a Commission for the government of the same; to collect and place in it wild beasts, wild fowl, and fish, male and female, native to Kansas; and also fragment bands of Indians, Grangers, Greenbackers, Populists, Middle-of-the-Roaders, the Farmers' Alliance, Allied Populists, Sound-Money Democrats, Free-Silver Republicans, and survivors of the Republican State League, male; and all domestic dogs, male and female; to make an appropriation for the purchase of land and certain rights of J. D. Bowersock, and for the expenses of the Commission; to regulate the operation of railroad trains through the city.

Section 7 provides that no train shall stop at Lawrence except during college commencement and holiday time, and then for the benefit of students only, and that passenger trains shall move through the town at a rate not less than 60 miles an hour.

Section 8 provides for a system of mail-bag catchers for the benefit of those desiring to leave Lawrence. People who want to get off at Lawrence shall be thrown off; provided, that the railroads shall not be liable in damages for the death or injury of persons who attempt to get on or off trains.

My first impulse was that it was a burlesque, but when I contemplate Jerry Simpson, Mrs. Lease, Carrie Nation, prohibition, and other Kansas calamities, I don't know; but may be it is. I wonder sometimes whether Kansas has deterioated or whether my taste has changed since leaving there.

What numbers of suburban property confidence games are being worked just now! The magazines are filled with alluring ads. of magnificent opportunities adjoining the great cities, with assurances of 25 per cent increase of value in a year, etc., when "de Lord he know" that if there was any such prospect the owners couldn't be pried loose from their holdings with old Archimedes' lever. But the workingman is prosperous now, and he must be separated from his savings in some way; so the Arnolds, the Stanleys, the suburban real estate sharps, and all the rest of the confidence fraternity are busy and doing well. There is one advantage of the late Arnold scheme over the suburban property graft—you have no taxes to pay on your worthless investment. Our Washington people are not behind in the race, realizing that Uncle Sam has a bigger list of d. f.'s on his pay roll than anybody else, and you can buy scrub-pine clay banks all around town at prices no greater than really valuable property in the city brings. Get in, boys; somebody has got to get your money.

Went a youngster whose first name was Robbert,
And bought him a rope

And sucked it and squirted and slobbert.

When Joe Babcock was the editor of the Mallet and Planer at our last fair, four or five years ago, he came into possession of an autograph book, on the fly-leaf of which is written "Robt. A. Johnson, Greenville, Ill., Aug. 24, 1880." As Joe wants to find an owner for it, I'm helping him, and I suspect the aforesaid Johnson, whoever he may be. There is an R. A. Johnson in our last Yearbook list of members. The title page says it is the "Paragon Autograph Album"—a statement I do not care to combat. There are real and imitation verses all the way through, to which men (apparently) have brazenly attached their names. After leaving the Greenville batch, I find "H. W. Middleton, Atlanta, Ga.;" "John F. Branson, St. Joseph, Mo.;" "J. H. Kelly, St. Louis;" "Edward E. Miller, Louisville;" "J. T. Peelle, Indianapolis;" "Robt. J. Burdette, Hawkeye;" "George W. Matchett, the Shakesperean Printer," and many more; but these will be sufficient to identify it if this should fall under the eyes of the owner.

* * * *

I see by the New England Printing Trades Journal that Boston Union has rejected Mr. Munsey's proposition to use in his Boston Journal a certain number of pages set up in his Washington and New York newspaper offices, the same as Columbia Union did with reference to the Times, on the ground that it would give Mr. Munsey an unfair advantage over other newspaper proprietors. It seems too much like the patent insides and outsides of country papers to be popular The real objection to it, in my opinion, is the fact that Washington printers have a right to print all parts of a Washington paper, at the Washington scale of wages. If such a practice is permitted, it means that much matter will be used in many different cities printed from matrices made from one setting, and combinations of newspapers will be formed all over to "swap" matter in order to compete with the proprietor who owns a "chain of papers."

There is a man named Barney Lane,
Who has captured the language of Spane,
And now can talk Spanish,
As well as walk Spanish,
Which are strains on both body and brane.

* * * *

The New England Printing Trades Journal gives me the credit of originating the idea of inviting all living I. T. U. ex-presidents to attend our convention this summer. While heartily indorsing it, it originated in and was given to the world by another great mind.

* * * *

I see by the dispatches that General Otis, of the Los Angeles Times, has been licked by a rival editor whom he had maligned. The I. T. U. will also conquer him sooner or later—not by violence, but by its splendid system of persuasion.

People may differ regarding Wilhelm II's position as an abstract Christian, but it must be confessed that in the concrete he furnishes a mighty funny imitation of a Cæsar turning his swords into agricultural implements.

S. M. S., of the Second Division, has no respect for Roscoe Conkling's dictum regarding those entitled to use the first person in the plural. The word "we" occurred nine times in a sixteen-line brevier paragraph of his last week.

"Andrew Morgan, Financier," by Oliver C. McCardell, has been the subject of much favorable comment. It is a very clever piece of satirical verse. Oliver, who is an able Record hand, would be a welcome addition to "Pard" Bloomer's coterie of TRADES UNIONIST word artists.

Although not unexpected, the death of John Henry Boner has caused deep regret in the circle of those who knew him as a man and as a poet. Few printers who have lived in Washington have reflected greater credit on their craft. In every task he performed he was moved by the sense of duty which is behind all good work in whatever field of endeavor. He was not a less conscientious worker and artist as a type-setter than he was as a student and literary editor. And herein he taught a lesson which younger generations of his fellow-craftsmen should take to heart; for overanxiety to shine has interfered with the full development of many a promising career. Let us, then, with a passing sigh for the manly dreamer who has just left us, remember, to use Walt Whitman's strong words, that John Henry Boner in his humble sphere did more than many a man who has won world-wide renown, inasmuch as he was one of those who will live, "to teach the average man the glory of his daily walk and trade."

AN EDITOR'S LUCK.

The editor sat in his splint-seat chair
With a fist full of bills which were long past due,
And his pale blue eyes had a glass-glare stare
As he figured with quill the way to pull through.
The landlord had said his bill must be paid,
The white paper folks had all credit denied,
The "hands," too, had "kicked" on store-order trade,
And the whole thing seemed like an office that's "pied."
While thus seated, not once smiling,
Scanning figures, oft beguiling,
Who should enter but a showman—
He who pleases honest yeomen,
And who knoweth that the printer
Hath less summer than of winter.
With the air of Davy Crockett
Drew he forth from his hip-pocket
One full-page picture display "ad,"
And now ye editor is glad!
Now he dreameth he's a drover,
Now he seemeth in high clover,
And he asketh odds of no man,
'Cept, of course, his friend, the show man.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

Union meeting Sunday.

There will be a Spring opening at the Ark Sunday.

Oh, for the old hand-set days and the afternoon distribution.

"Notorious" Pugh, permanent address United States, is subbing on the Times.

Frank Hughes, the popular bankman of the Times, has been confined to his room several days with a cold.

The man who grinds the organ and yanks the string while the monkey does the rest is now "doing" the town.

This is the time of year when the good husband hesitates before ordering a new spring suit till the dear wife has a definite estimate from the milliner.

Occasionally we run onto a man who is in favor of allowing the ladies a representative delegate this year, but the motion still lacks the necessary two-thirds.

C. W. Ingalls, a brother of I. M. Ingalls, of the First Division, G. P. O., who has been in the Second Division Night Force during the present session, left for Chicago Monday morning.

John A. Wiedman, of Bookbinders' Union, No. 4, was elected Secretary-Treasurer of the Allied Printing Trades Council recently. He will bring to the position marked ability and a close attention to its wants made necessary by the increasing needs of the organization.

We have seen two cards of candidates for delegate in Baltimore. Both candidates hail from the Herald—C. Norman Steigelman and Charles S. Bastian. The latter gentleman is well known here from his long connection with the Record, G. P. O., where he often contributed items to this paper over the name "Cuban."

It would be difficult to make Tom Billings believe that the number 13 has no significance. The other day at the "Spess" he had a "take" with a run down for the representative of slug 113, who followed slug 13, and the three takes measured 1,300 ems each. Tom noticed this chain of evidence and upon it predicated an opinion that something startling was likely to happen. That evening as he reached home a negro pensioner who had imbibed too freely dropped suddenly dead in front of Tom's gate, and the first thing he thought of was the ominous 13.

In a letter to this office inclosing a remittance for six new subscribers to our list in the Bureau of Printing at Manila, P. I., Fred C. Miller says: "Tracy and Anderson are still here, and not bound for the States, as rumored. As for Tracy, he has no thought of returning for several years. Should he leave here on the expiration of his three years' service he contemplates going to Australia. Edwin C. Jones returned yesterday (January 23) from a two weeks' trip to Hongkong, Canton, and other places in China, having gone for health and recreation. The weather at this time of the year is delightful. All our people are enjoying excellent health, none having been in the hospital for months past."

Large, light room for two, with board; 432 Sixth street northeast.

Second Division.

There will be an election for chairman the last of this month. Cheer up!

Washburne has been on the sick list for some time, but returned to work Monday.

We are sorry part of Congress has gone so soon, as it necessitates a reduction of the force.

Thomas A. Fitzgerald, who has been suffering from rheumatism some weeks, has returned to work again.

We had two additions to our force during the past week. They are Thos. F. Travis and H. W. Kitzmiller.

D. T. Floyd, who has been confined to his home several days on account of sickness, returned to work Monday.

The foreman of the Night Bill Force, Mr. Charles E. Young, has been acting in Mr. Spottswood's place during his absence.

It would seem that L. C. Richards can "push a pen" as well as he can "roll the ball," if we are to judge from what we hear about him.

T. F. Hall, who was called to Cambridge, Md., on account of the death of his mother-in-law, returned to work Monday after several days' absence.

A number of our members attended the 12th annual banquet of the Vaughn Class Friday night. They all report having enjoyed themselves immensely.

We understand the First Division bowling team has challenged the Second Division team to play them a match game. Here's hoping the Second will win.

Each number of the Typographical Journal seems to be an improvement on its predecessor. Surely the I. T. U. made no mistake when it voted to send it to every member of the union throughout the jurisdiction.

The friends of Assistant Foreman of Printing Spottswood will be glad to hear that he is gradually convalescing. He has been confined to his home for several days on account of a severe cold, which developed into la grippe.

It is rumored that Mark Barnum, an efficient and deservedly popular employee of the Job Room, is a candidate for delegate. We hope the rumor is correct, as Mark is a good union man, with a clean record, and he deserves to win out.

"Clotilde" says certain individuals—not in the trust or "Sym."—are lending out money and charging "Sym." rates of interest, and are thus violating an I. T. U. law. "Clotilde," dear boy, are not all the members of the "Syms." also violating said law?

Theodore Gerber, of this division, received a communication from "Sis" Hopkins, who was sent home some time ago suffering from nervous prostration, in which he states that he (Hopkins) is still quite sick. His friends here hope that he will soon recover.

Whatever may be the merits of the controversy going on in the Typographical Journal between Brothers Bloomer and Donath in regard to the attitude of the Star of this city, past and present, on the labor question, there is no gainsaying the fact that the Star management have been exceptionally kind and thoughtful of the interests of its employees. Let us render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's.

One of the new men, who seems to think that he is working on a morning paper, met with a painful accident Monday while rushing a galley to the proof press. He lost his equilibrium and his pedal extremities assumed a heavenly attitude, while his dome of thought went down and came in violent contact with a truck. Kind friends came to the rescue, and after the "smoke of the contact" was over it was discovered that the genial knight of the stick had received a scalp wound. A doctor put a few stitches in the place that did the most good, and the artist resumed operations a sadder, but wiser man.

The following is the score of the twenty-third game between the two bowling teams of the Second Division, which took place at the Rathskeller on March 6, 1903:

NOBLES' TEAM.	First game.	Sec'nd game.	Third game.	Total.
Parshall	151	137	206	494
Sherman	162	158	185	505
McFadyen	136	83	166	385
McAloon	129	180	149	458
Nobles	109	124	145	378
Total	687	682	851	2210
BRANHAM'S TEAM.
Moler	121	136	117	374
Saltzman	124	194	151	469
Smith	163	126	186	475
Richards	140	175	120	435
Branham	102	130	98	330
Total	650	761	672	2038

Fred. I. Nobles was elected captain of the Second Division team in place of Mr. Parshall, who resigned at the last meeting of the club.

What at the time seems an affliction or misfortune often proves a blessing in disguise. For instance, when an attempt was being made some years ago to "throw the strong arm of the civil-service law" around this office, the District men were the most strenuous in their opposition to the change, claiming that if it was made that they (the District, or down-town men), would not have any show at all. But the change has been in effect for some years, and we don't think we will be contradicted when we say that there are more District men in the office to-day holding situations on their merits than ever before. Then there were others who claimed that if the change was made our union would be broken up and the office filled with non-union men. But the very reverse is true, as our organization was never in better condition, financially and otherwise, than it is to-day.

S. M. S.

Treasury Division.

Elmer Coates was on the sick list for about a week or ten days.

John T. Williams, pressman, was transferred to the main office last week.

The bonds are now running and Harry Hughes has charge of them as maker-up.

Mrs. Haddie Z. Coskery was assigned to the folding room in this division some time ago.

Mrs. A. E. I. Andrews, of the folding room, who has been ill since the first of January, is still very sick.

Dr. W. J. Manning, maker-up, has the sympathy of all in the loss of one of his children, who died very suddenly Sunday.

W. A. Hartman was elected chairman of our chapel recently by acclamation. Bill makes a faithful and efficient official.

Theophilus McClure, compositor, and W. H. Dickson, laborer, have returned to this division. Their friends were glad to welcome them back.

Miss Ellen A. Featherstone, one of our popular pressfeeders, received her absolute appointment recently, her probationary period having expired.

Ed. S. Moores, who was a maker-up here for several years, was transferred to the main office this week and has charge of the postoffice in the Third Division.

Theodore Reier, pressman, who has been sick at his home in Baltimore since Christmas week, returned to work about one week ago, much to the delight of his host of friends.

George Williams moved out near the Zoo the first of the month. He is awakened every morning now at daybreak by the bark of the wolves and the roar of the lions and other animals.

The following temporary compositors were assigned to this division last week: Alfred Dietz, Frank P. Lippincott, George Terwilliger, James O. McCallister, Clayton Stanford, and Charles W. S. Huff.

Miss F. R. Harkness, who has been quite sick at the Providence Hospital for several weeks with typhoid fever, has sufficiently recovered to leave that institution. Her friends hope to see her back with us in a short while.

Capt. J. R. McKelvey, who has been our engineer for several years, was transferred to the main office last week, the position having been abolished, all of our machinery now being run by electricity. Mr. McKelvey is a veteran of the civil war, an affable and polished gentleman. We part with him with regret.

When the force was reduced several weeks ago the following were transferred to the main office: Compositors, Wm. J. Bullis, Wm. M. Holeman, Jas. H. Irwin, Harry B. Judson, E. D. King, James B. Knapp, Theophilus McClure, Robert F. Sims, and John H. Williams; feeders and folders, Misses Littie L. Post, M. E. Bowie, Margaret Brosnan, Kate I. Browne, Esther L. Danforth, Augusta W. Russell, and A. Trumbo; helpers, Joseph S. Cornish and W. H. Dickson.

The Treasury Department was so badly in need of space that it deemed it advisable to take part of this office for the Duplicating Division of the Supervising Architect's office. In order to do this it was necessary to materially reduce the force, remove three presses, and send several of our publications to the main office. Thirty feet has been taken off the end of our room, together with the engine room and all the space at the head of the steps leading up from the Fifteenth street side of the building. The partition has been erected and workmen are engaged on the other improvements.

March 10, 1903. L. B. No. 10, N. A.

Fourth Division.

C. B. Yater has been called to a higher position—a situation in the Job Room.

Recent additions to this division from the Night Force are: Messrs. Adams, Cook, Powers, Taylor, and Templar.

Chas. G. Koonce received a telegram announcing the serious illness of his mother at Raleigh, N. C., and left for that place Monday evening.

Mr. C. F. Webster's friends were congratulating him Friday on the arrival of a 9 pound boy at his residence. Long life and prosperity were wished the youngster in several beakers of foaming ale, etc.

Our genial fellow-craftsman, Theo. Hanft, received the sad intelligence of the loss of his only brother at St. Louis, on February 28, by typhoid fever. He has the sympathy of the room in his hour of sorrow.

The following temporaries have been relieved from further participation in the strenuous life of this division: C. F. Webster, R. E. Beall, William Jacques, Bob Sims, H. T. McConvey, G. W. Duvall, and Dale C. Sheriff.

B. R. Preuss, formerly of this division, but now pounding lead on the Bill Force, dropped in Monday, and was kept busy receiving the congratulations of his many friends. Preuss lately joined the ranks of the Benedicts.

Some one was unkind enough to remark that it was not the month for Flowers. As the next election of chairman occurs in May, it will not be amiss to call attention to the fact that that is the month when blossoms are thickest.

It has not been definitely determined what day inaugurates the spring season this year, whether it is the opening of the eastern jockey club circuit at Bennings or the first baseball game in Washington. Nevertheless the questions of "Who pitches to-day?" or "What's hot, Bill?" will settle the matter and give notice that gentle spring is really here.

On receipt of a telegram announcing the serious illness of his mother at Springfield, Ill., James Doocy departed for that place Thursday. As his mother has long since passed the allotted term of three score years and ten, the Grim Messenger may have made his presence known before Jim can arrive, but the hope is prevalent among his friends that his mother is spared to him a while longer.

The regular quarterly election of chairman was held on Wednesday, and proved to be one of the most interesting and exciting affairs of this nature that the division has known for some time. Mr. Gove has so conducted the business of his office that his unseating has been a difficult matter, and has as not yet been accomplished. Mr. Gove had for his opponent on this occasion Mr. A. G. Flowers, whom he defeated by a vote of 54 to 41, thus attesting a popularity which knows no waning and which has kept him in office for the sixth consecutive term. The vote cast for Mr. Flowers was highly complimentary to that gentleman when the fact is considered that he has been but a short time in this division and unknown at the time to quite a few members. Mr. Burkhart was unanimousiy reelected to the office of secretary, a position which he has filled with credit and distinction.

□ Gentle spring has not as yet entered the city, but is making his way here by easy stages. This fact, however, is not interfering with the business of the baseball microbe, which is making its presence felt at every opportunity, and the festive "fan" and the ambitious amateur are getting ready for the fray. As the Departmental League will not be in the field this season, it has been suggested that a league be formed among the employees of the Government Printing Office, to be known as the G. P. O. League. The schedule of the American League shows that the Senators will be doing their stunts over the circuit during the entire month and that Washington will be without baseball. That seems to be about the best thing that could happen for the proposed G. P. O. League. The printers' ambition to imitate the professional ball-player peters out in about a month. Arrangements might be made with Manager Loftus whereby a lease of the grounds for a month might be obtained. Those favoring the suggestion may communicate with Tom Fitzwilliams, of the Job Room; Fred Berger, of the Fifth Division; Will K. Martin, of the Third Division, and John F. Luitich, of this division. Should a sufficient number interest themselves in the scheme a meeting will be called for an early date and arrangements perfected. All are welcome, and the more the merrier.

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. VII. No. 40. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, MARCH 19, 1903. Price, 3 Cents.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

Grocery Clerks' Union to Hold Open Session After Next Meeting.

MACHINISTS OUT FOR 8 HOURS

Tailors' Contract Signed—The Columbia Theater Trouble to Be Arbitrated—Council Refuses to Pay Legal Expenses Incident to the Portner Flats Trouble.

The meeting was called to order at 8:30 p. m. by President Hamerstrom.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Credentials were received from the following Unions, and delegates declared seated:

Beer Drivers' and Stablemen's Union, No. 234: Wm. Schaeffer, vice R. F. West, resigned.

Journeymen Stone and Marble Cutters' Association, Washington Branch: Frank Clocker and John Carroll.

Paperhangers' Local No. 420: H. E. Webb.

Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101: T. M. Ring, vice A. J. E. Hubbard, resigned.

The credentials from Marble Mosaic and Granito Workers' Union, No. 8902, certifying that Lingi Occhronero, Geo. Batta Cinotti, Enrico Esperti, Frank Freshi, and Frank Scagnali were duly elected to represent that organization in the Central Labor Union, were laid over until next meeting.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From United Trades and Labor Council, Cleveland, Ohio, asking for copy of certain blank forms used by this body. Request granted.

From Coopers' International Union, stating that the American Cereal Company, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, has been taken from the unfair list by that body, and asking for the support of organized labor for that company. Placed on file.

From International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths asking corporation of central body in organizing blacksmiths in this jurisdiction. Referred to organizers.

From Journeymen Stone and Marble Cutters' Association, Washington Branch, refuting an alleged statement that Business Agent Ratigan had asserted that the Stone Laborers' Union had applied for a change of their charter so as to include the derrickmen and pointers. After considerable discussion the communication was laid on the table.

From Stereotypers' Union, No. 1, New York City, asking that attention be called to the fact that certain business houses continue to patronize the U. S. Printing Company, Brooklyn, N. Y., who conduct a nonunion electrotyping plant. The product of these houses are "Ball Blue," made by The Heller-Merz Company, New York; Harris Coffee Company, 260 Front street, New York; Josiah Webb & Co., Milton, Mass.; "Candies" from the Arbuckle Company, Burlington, Vt. Filed.

From Steel and Copper Plate Cleaners, No. 8810, asking information as to manner of applying for membership in this body. Referred to secretary.

LONG PRIMER SORTS.

Good morning. Have you read Senator Morgan's speech yet?

Although it may be proper to call Spess compositors spessers, it doesn't follow that it is absolutely necessary to refer to Spess compositoresses as spessesses.

Last Tuesday the paragrapher of the Washington Post remarked, "No truly loyal son of the sod would have an orange for breakfast this morning." Of course not; he had greens for dinner.

"THE KING OF KOR,"

Sidney J. Marshall's romance, will be put on the market soon, if this writer is reliably informed. The delay in its publication has been caused by some difficulty in the matter of binding. The appearance of the book is looked forward to with keen expectation, and that Mr. Marshall's venture will prove a financial as well as a literary success is very probable.

Since Mr. Bloomer drove the teatotalers from the field there has been no voice lifted up in behalf of temperance, so that the verses which follow may serve a good purpose at this season of seductive bock and enticing highballs.

GOOD OLD WHISKY STRAIGHT.

I hear you've soured on water, Bill,
And hate it with much hate,
And walk a crooked chalk-line, Bill,
From drinking whisky straight.

When you wake up o' mornings, Bill,
I'm sorry to relate,
You have to prime your thinker, Bill,
With gulps of whisky straight.

Down your œsophagal canal
Has passed, I calculate,
At least ten thousand gallons, Bill,
Of good old whisky straight.

Let noisy watermongers, Bill,
Rise up and agitate;
It does not move your spirit, Bill,
If you have whisky straight.

Hurrah for good old liquor, Bill;
It's ecstacy is great.
Hurrah for good old liquor, Bill;
Hurrah for whisky straight.

To miss a morning snifter, Bill,
Is quite unfortunate;
Then here's to good old whisky, Bill—
To good old whisky straight.

Hurrah for good old whisky, Bill;
We'll fill another cup,
And try, by pouring whisky down,
To bust our livers up.

With clinking of the glasses, Bill,
We'll drown the voice of Fate,
And burn the galling bonds of care
With fiery whisky straight.

Then let her gurgle, gurgle down,
Without a hesitate,
Till merrily the world spins round
In fumes of whisky straight.

Aye, let the stricken deer go weep,
The deeress do the same;
We'll fill us up with fiery stuff,
And whisky is its name.

We'll turn the bottle upside down,
And with a maudlin wink
We'll drink and drink from morn till night—
From night till morn we'll drink.

A BIT OF ALL SORTS.

George Hupert, proofreader on the Star, should make good delegate timber, and he is about due.

Business must be good in Baltimore, judging from the advertisements in the daily papers for printers and pressmen.

L. W. Phillips, of the main press room, has been doing duty at the "Spess," during the absence of Col. Lydick.

John D. Ward, of the job press room, who had the great misfortune to break his legs on December 25, is still at the Emergency Hospital, but is able to use crutches, and expects to be out in a week or ten days.

The "Spess" did the handsome by "Uncle" John Griffin, Pard Bloomer's mention of the old gentleman's condition in THE TRADES UNIONIST having called their attention to the needs of a good, worthy old Union printer.

The pressmen are in the throes of a political campaign, their election for delegates to Cincinnati occurring on the 4th of April. They send three delegates, and, as there are four candidates, the fight is hot among the four to escape being the tail-ender.

One of the most popular employees of the office with all classes—compositors, bookbinders, pressmen, and all who know him—is Charlie Schulte, of the night pressroom. Charlie is out for a trip to the Cincinnati convention of the I. P. P. & A. U., and his host of friends say he is a winner, and he deserves to be.

The Inland Printer gives Jimmy Furbeshaw a very complimentary notice for some of the printing he is turning out as foreman at Crane's. Jimmy comes from a printing family, two of his brothers being well-known compositors, his uncle George was for over thirty years foreman of Martin B. Brown's, in New York, and his father—well everybody knows the rotund and jolly Colonel Jim.

The Kansas City Typothetae and the allied printing trades have gotten together and made a contract for a term of years. That city has suffered for a great many years from the cutthroat policy of the rat proprietors and the "open" office, until even the worst enemies of the trades unions saw that their only salvation was to change to proper business methods and put all on an equality by employing union help.

W. B. Prescott, ex-President of the I. T. U., is now a regular editorial writer on the Inland Printer, and he is a good one. I would like to see his article on the "United Typothetae and the I. T. U.," in the February Inland Printer reproduced in the Typographical Journal, and in every other printers journal. I also think it would be a good idea for the Typographical Journal to engage him to write exclusively for it.

C. F. Whitmarsh has withdrawn from the Inland Printer company, of which he has been secretary for many years, to do business on his own hook as an advertising expert. I remember him first as a proof reader at Rand & McNally's, and one of the first men I ever knew to utilize the bicycle for business purposes. At that time Henry O. Shepard, president of the Henry O. Shepard Company, was a compositor at Knight & Leonard's.

Stuart Robson, the actor, while here recently, referred pleasantly to the days when he was a printer. Theodore Hamilton, another eminent actor, is never so well content as when in the society of the craftsmen of his early days, and there are many others. Over in New York recently a police captain died very suddenly, and they found in his desk at the station-house a mere bagatelle of something over $100,000 in coin and jewelry. And he, too, had been a printer.

Press Feeders and Assistants' Union, No. 42, of this city, will send four delegates to the International Peessmen and Assistants' convention, which will be held in Cincinnati in June next. This union has a membership exceeding 300, and the campaign is unique in that the candidates are mostly all women, and they are hustling for votes in regulation style. Mrs. Alice Zook, the president of the Union, and the Misses Watts and Burges, secretary and treasurer, respectively, are good officers, and stand a good chance of election.

Have you ever noticed the number of small children employed in the stores of this city—little boys and girls scarcely more than ten years of age? There may be some few cases where parents are compelled to send youngsters of that age out to hustle for the necessaries of life, but I am pretty confident that Greed is the monster that is responsible for children of tender years being employed in the shops and stores of the National Capitol. I don't know if there is a law prohibiting such inhumanity in the District, but there should be, and it should be enforced.

On the way home one evening last week I had the pleasure of a chat and a handshake with one of the leading members of the Bricklayers' Union, Mr. Ferry, a man who has been active in union matters here in Washington for a quarter of a century or more. He said: "I am going home after a hard day's work to read and enjoy Bloomer. I never had the pleasure of meeting him personally, but I know him and I enjoy him, and he is a man after my own heart." I assured him his diagnosis of "Pard," agreed exactly with my own, and that I would be happy some day to make them acquainted.

I met an old and much beloved friend on the Avenue recently, Col. John D. Kehoe, ex-president of Columbia Union, ex delegate any number of times, and a royal good fellow any old time or place, and we put in a good hour or more of reminiscence of the days when both of us were somewhat younger; when the barbecue and the good bargoo were part of the enjoyments of life, and the iron printer had not come into existence to the total extermination of the class of printers that are gone never to return. Col. Kehoe is occupying a snug berth in the Treasurery Department, working six hours per, drawing a comfortable salary, and perfectly content.

I presume I am like most everybody else—read things and see things with eyes half shut, but I woke up the other day and I have been hot ever since—and the cause? A simple case in the police court. Five young men arranged for what?—for daring to walk into the District of Columbia seeking employment and without money in their pockets. They were respectable in appearance, intelligent, and to all outward evidence would make good citizens. But they were walking in—and they had no money. Had they been able to beat their way in on a railroad, or had they held up some chaffuer for his automobile and rode in, they would no doubt have been welcome. But to walk in, without money, is a crime! Then in this great and glorious capitol of the great nation, under this form of government that is held up as a paragon by the upper Four Hundred, it shall be a crime for anyone to be without money, and the fellows who have'nt any should lose no time in getting at the surplus of those who have money to burn.

The serious illness of Mr. Beriah Wilkins, proprietor of the Post, is universally regretted by the members of the printing crafts, as they have always found him a fair, just and liberal employer. Mr. Wilkins came first to Washington as a member of Congress from an Eastern Ohio district, and I have heard him tell with a great deal of pleasure how he come to be nominated. There was a deadlock in the convention, which had continued until everybody was completely worn out, when an old farmer arose and announced that he and others were tired of the fight, and proposed to have a new deal, and he therefore placed in nomination Mr. Bee-ri-ea Wilkins. The peculiar pronunciation of the name created a laugh, put everyone in good humor and started a boom in his favor which finally made him successful. In Congress he became acquainted with Frank Hatton; they bought the Washington Post, and the combination of Mr. Wilkins' business tack with Mr. Hatton's ability as a newspaper man made the paper a success from the start, and laid the foundation for what it is to-day the leading American newspaper.

St. Patrick's Day to me always recalls sad recollections. I went to St. Louis one time with a young Irishman for a partner, and he had relatives living in Kerry Patch. If you don't recall Kerry Patch twenty or more years ago ask Claude McDonald. Well, it was to St. Louis what Swampoodle is to Washington, only more so. The people were a rollicking, free-spoken, good hearted lot, and my partner's relatives were hospitality personified. We had some good times at christenings and weddings and the like, and St. Patrick's Day came around and we went up to a celebration in the evening, where there was speaking and singing and drinking. I was called on for a few remarks. I had coralled from a picnic poster we always printed when I was an apprentice a Gaelic quotation, and I said to myself here is a chance for you to show these simple Irish folks that they have not only an orator but a scholar among them, and I threw in the quotation, but whether I chucked it in the wrong place or whether I did not get it just right, it did not have the effect I intended, as some of the people laughed, and a black-eyed cousin of my friend laughed louder than any one else, and I have not cared much for St. Patrick's Day since.

Women's Auxiliary.

The Women's Auxiliary of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, met at Typographical Temple on Wednesday evening, March 18, for the second meeting to encourage the extension of the organization.

The Auxiliary having for its object the furtherance of the interests of all persons interested in the printing trade, the insistence on the use of the printing trades label and all other labels in the purchase of commodities, appeals to all persons directly interested in the work undertaken by the organization.

It is earnestly requested that all members of Columbia Union, No. 101, will aid the organization by encouraging the wives, sisters and daughters of the members to join the Auxiliary.

At the coming I. T. U. convention, to be held in this city next August, the Auxiliary will take a prominent part in assisting in entertaining the lady visitors at the convention.

The next meeting will be held on Saturday evening, March 28, for the purpose of enrolling members, after which the charter will be secured. After the charter is closed all new members will be required to pay an admission fee of $1.00 in joining the Auxiliary.

It is hoped that at the next meeting that the membership, which is now about one hundred, will be considerably increased.

While the meetings of the Auxiliary are for women, all members of the Union interested are invited to be present at the next meeting and escort a prospective new memper to the meeting.

At the conclusion of the business meeting a musical program will be rendered and refreshments will be served.

The Pure Dairy Lunch.

In our last issue we referred to the Pure Dairy Lunch Room as having discontinued the use of the Sharon Dairy milk and cream. The proprietor of the Pure Dairy Lunch (Mr. Dinneen) states positively that he has not patronized the Sharon Dairy in recent years and feels aggrieved over the fact that he was even quoted as being a customer of Corbin Thompson. We know Mr. Dinneen to be an honorable, straightforward business man, and regret that his place was inadvertently classed with other places using the Sharon Dairy product.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

Here we sing in stolen meter
With a rythm that is rotten—
Quickly sung and soon forgotten:
When we Spessward have departed
To the chapels known by number,
Will the bright lights of Bonini
Shine upon the stroke of 4?
Will the wigwam of Billriley
Ope its doors just as early?
Find we there our Purdy, jester,
Seated with him John, the chesty?
(Lo! the yokel lists in wonder!)
Swapping stories till Aurora
Paints the eastward beyond Bennings,
Bright'ning somber hues and gray,
While the coming of the crimson
Tells the dawning of the day.

H. S. SUTTON.

A Well-Deserved Tribute Neatly Paid.

THE TRADES UNIONIST:—It is gratifying to know that a disparaging remark indulged in on a recent occasion by that prolific and always readable writer, Mr. Arthur F. Bloomer, has afforded Mr. August Donath an opportunity, in a later issue of The Typographical Journal, to discant at some length on a few of the noble deeds that have marked the intercourse of Mr. Frank B. Noyes, business manager of the Washington Evening Star, with the employees of that model establishment—one of the finest, if not the very finest, "print shops" known to the daily press of the twentieth century. It is not my purpose to recapitulate what Mr. Donath has said on this subject, as every member of the craft has now a "free swing" at The Typographical Journal, and has read or can read his article in the March number, but I can not refrain from commending the writer for publicly proclaiming the humane acts of humane men, such as Mr. Noyes and those associated with him have proven themselves to be.

I never could subscribe to the idea of waiting for a man or a woman to die before pointing out the good he or she may have done while living, and hence I was not only pleased but edified by learning that we have in our midst one of the most successful newspaper establishments in the country which is in no sense of the word a "soulless corporation." Good deeds are far from being rare in this selfish world of ours, it is true, but for one heart-cheering act recorded in the public press, thousands of evil ones have been proclaimed, which is not, to my mind, at least, as it should be.

As a man old in the journalistic harness, I can bear abundant testimony to the noble and generous spirit which seems to be almost inherent in "knights of the stick and rule," and as I conceive that the "good deeds well done" which Mr. Donath has revealed properly pertains to that class, I deem the craft deserving of the credit. Long life, then, not only to the Evening Star, but to the grand army of "comps" here and elsewhere who so cheerfully and frequently reach down into their pockets to relieve a brother craftsman or his family in distress, or to aid in any other good work which appeals to their better natures. As a venerable priest in this city remarked on a certain occasion which called forth a manifestion of this God-given charity in the Government Printing Office, "Surely the Good Lord will reward the printers for their generosity to each other."

Safety for Workmen.

Boston Globe.]

If there are manifest and obvious risks of personal injury to workmen in a certain dangerous employment, on what principle of ethics should the burden of those manifest dangers be thrown upon the shoulders of those least able to bear them? Which is the most sacred, life or money engaged in dangerous employments? The capital so invested is well protected by the laws. The public welfare demands more protection for the workman. Eighty per cent of the citizens of Massachusetts are wage-earners. It is the first duty of the Legislature to safeguard their interests.

No great public or private enterprise can now be carried on without peril to life and limb. Brave workmen for the sake of their families are assuming terrible risks. The death of a brakeman who falls from the top of an ice-covered car does not cost the stockholders a dollar, because he assumed the risk. The lineman who is electrocuted does not cost the company the price of a new pole. The gas or sewer worker is asphyxiated. Factory operatives lose life or limb. All are doing a necessary duty. Yet none can recover damages. Wholesome regulations for the safety of workmen can not cripple our industries or imperil the success of the vast enterprises which are now enjoying to the fullest extent a succession of bountiful business harvests.

THE TRADES UNIONIST is heartily and unqualifiedly indorsed by the Central Labor Union and the Allied Building Trades as well as by the various locals connected with the two central bodies.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL WASHINGTON. 2

THURSDAY, MARCH 19, 1903.

The Portner Flats Case.

The legal contention in the suit brought by the Southern Expanded Metal Company against A. GETZ & SONS was decided to-day (Thursday, 19th). Judge HAGNER dissolved the restraining order issued on the 12th instant directing the firm of A. GETZ & SONS to refrain from interfering with the Southern Expanded Metal Company in carrying out the contract let to the Expanded Metal Company by A. GETZ & SONS for lathing on the Portner Flats. As the Expanded Metal Company employed men not affiliated with the A. F. of L. through the Central Labor Union, the other trades on the building refused to work with them, and the men were called off on the 12th instant.

A permanent injunction was denied by Judge HAGNER on the ground that the provisions in the general contract should be carried out by the subcontractors. As the general contract called for union labor affiliated with the A. F. of L. and Central Labor Union, the learned judge held that the contract was legal, as the owner or owners has the right to employ such labor as may be desired. In this case the general contract plainly called for union labor affiliated with the Central Labor Union, and the Expanded Metal Company, through its subcontract, would have to comply with the provisions of the general contract before proceeding on the work.

The decision will be received with general satisfaction, as it carries with it a sweeping declaration that the making of a provision in a general contract specifying the kind of labor to be employed is valid under the law.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

To my good friends of the composing rooms of the Times and the Post I am going to read a lecture. The right of any man to lecture any other man exists in its assertion, and I am now asserting it. That there might be a business rivalry and jealousy between the proprietors of these papers is easy to understand, but why there should be bickering and reciprocatory annoyances between their respective employees is inexplicable. Some months ago the Times men (some of them) were busy trying to legislate in regard to occasional overtime work done at the Post—a matter that did not affect the Times men in the least—and some feeling was engendered. Very recently the Post men (some of them) have taken a deep interest in the wages and business arrangements of the Times men, by which they were undoubtedly getting more than the scale and not infringing it in any particular, and which does not in any degree affect the Post. In both cases I believe the union "set on" the trouble makers. Now, why must we have these things? The proprietors of both papers are just, and yield generously to the requests of the union without contest. If a matter came up in the Times office involving any real union principle, nobody would declare themselves in regard to it as quickly as the Times men—the parties most interested; and exactly the same thing is true of the Post men. Brethren, why can't you have confidence in and respect for each other? I am afraid these squabbles are the work of "professional square men," whom somebody (I believe it was I, but we'll let that pass) once described as men who devote their energies to keeping somebody else "square." Now, gentlemen of the Post, if at any time your rights are encroached on, come to the union with your "holler" and we'll see you righted; and, gentlemen of the Times, please keep the peace till somebody steps on your toes. Meanwhile the Star men are sawing wood and saying nothing.

The Maerzen Flats, on H street northwest (I forget their euphonious designation), surely present to passers-by a gratifying evidence of the comfort and plenty enjoyed by the occupants. Rows of milk jars, pickle bottles, saucepans, cold roasts, embalmed hash, vegetable remains of beautiful repasts, and occasionally beer bottles and other drink receptacles adorn the upper windows, as though to mock the poverty and want of him who passes. It is all right to get the most one can out of life and to enjoy the creature comforts that a boundless wealth and magnificent salaries provide, but it is a little cruel to the rest of us to have all this opulence exhibited to us when it is so far beyond our reach. The "Panroast," further east on H street, is but a cold and dismal pile of gray bricks compared to the glories of the "Maerzen," and if its occupants ever have anything to eat at all, there is no evidence of the fact displayed to the eager gaze of the street-car patron and pedestrian.

SOME EDUCATIONAL "LIMERICKS."

There was a young man in Coeymans
Who had delirium tremens—
  Tried to spell the town's name
  From the sound of the name,
And yelled like two hundred demons.

Out on the wild Youghiogheny,
Whose name might well knock a brainy
  Man into a fit
  Who pronounces it,
They've a jail where they lock a zany.

As a Senator from Florida comes Taliaferro,
Who easily represents all of her;
  Why he spells it that way
  I'm sure I can't say,
But it rhymes with Patrick J. Bolivar.

In New Hampshire's county Coos
The stones roll so much they've no moss,
  And the cows are all bald,
  But come when they're called
By the soothing old Yankee "Coboss."

A letter from August Donath was read in the Union last Sunday suggesting that the fund for the erection of a memorial to Amos J. Cummings be raised by voluntary offerings from his admirers in the shape of a small amount each month, which was referred to the officers of the Union. As an evidence of his good faith Mr. D. sent $10 along with his letter, which, with his proposition, received generous applause.

L. C. Hay suggests that possibly John C. Ketcheson, of Leavenworth, may attend the convention next August. Though "Ketch" has long been an employing printer, he is as staunch a unionist as he was when he was recording secretary of Chicago Union, in 1862, and there are many who will be glad to renew acquaintance with him.

Looking over the list of inmates of the Printers' Home, I find the names of several I knew when they were young and I younger. Among them are William R. Wade, who took me on my maiden "tramp" in 1871; Luther T. Quick, whom I worked with on the New York Herald as long ago as 1870; A. J. ("Jack") Robinson, who was a son of E. B. ("Old Bull") Robinson, of this city; O. B. ("Oby") Williams, with whom I became acquainted on the Chicago Republican (the progenitor of the Inter Ocean) in 1870; Ezra L. Lewis, if he is my old friend "Ez," of St. Joe, Mo.; H. P. ("Cap") Macloon, another of my old St. Joe friends and a veteran officer and soldier of the war; Charles W. Bissell, whom I knew in Toledo or Cleveland about a third of a century ago; and my old friend John McKillop, of Boston, as jolly and good-natured a chap as walks. There may be others of my friends there; besides there are our recent Washington bestowals.

* * * *

Among those who were let out at the recent reduction of force was John W. Crowe, of Philadelphia, a veteran member and ex-delegate of No. 2. Before leaving he made a gift of $5 to the Ex-Delegates' Association, saying that his heart and soul were with us and that he would become a member if he were to remain in the city. We hope to have him with us at the convention, and I wish him all the prosperity that his geniality and generosity deserve.

The Typographical Journal for March publishes resolutions of Newcastle (Pa.) Union on the death of Willis Emery, at the Home, on January 10, Newcastle being his birthplace and early home. In my boyhood days Emery was one of the most noted job printers in Kansas, working in all the larger towns. There was a sort of rivalry between him and Harry Stafford as to which was the most artistic, and all the printers of the State were the adherents of the one or the other. He went to the Home from Chicago, I believe. I think Stafford has been dead for some years.

At the meeting of the Union last Sunday the name of August Donath was placed on the honorary roll by a unanimous rising vote. Philip S. Steele, Secretary W. M. Garrett, and others paid glowing tributes to the staunch unionism of Mr. Donath and recited numerous instances of his devotion and usefulness to the union. This is a well-deserved honor for Mr. Donath, who for forty years has testified by acts as well as words of voice and pen that unionism with him was not a matter of present personal interest, but a deep, ever-existing principle, and it is a matter of satisfaction that there was not one word or vote against conferring this honor on him.

A friend of mine who spent some time in Petersburg, Va.—Jimmy Brister's town—remarked a curious custom there by which the inhabitants are kept informed as to the day of the week, the usual facilities for furnishing this information being absent for some unaccountable reason. In front of the mayor's office is strung a row of pumpkins—seven on Monday morning—from which one is removed each day until there is but one left—Sunday morning, of course, when the Petersburger is made acquainted with the fact that he should go to church. It is quite ingenious, and if the pumpkin tender does not neglect his duty a mistake is impossible.

In the death of Andrew Keiner we have lost a whole souled, genial friend, with as kindly, obliging a disposition as ever a man had. Even-tempered and inoffensive, I never saw him exhibit anger under any circumstances. He was an excellent printer and proof-reader, remarkably proficient in Masonry, and well informed on the every-day subjects of life. Generous to the last degree, every case of need sent his hand to his pocket, and no service for a friend was ever too arduous or annoying for him to undertake. May everlasting peace and happiness be his reward.

One time when Charlie Crow, now a down-town man and known in Washington for the past quarter of a century, was in Pittsburg, "Kid" McGill was there at the same time, and as the latter was on a "bat" he felt despondent.

"If I had a gun I'd blow my head off," said he.

"Permit me to serve you," said Crow, snaking out a six-shooter and placing it on a bench on which McGill was lying. "I'm going out now, and I want you to do the job right before I get back."

The "Kid" went to sleep and Charlie took a walk. A few hours later he met McGill on the street, comfortably hilarious.

"I thought I provided the means for you to gratify your desire to die," said he.

"No, you provided the means for me to live and to get more enjoyment out of life than ever. Here's the ticket for your gun. I got $1.60 on it."

Charlie got mad and proceeded to trim the "Kid" up, and as a result his fine made his attempted generosity cost him $12.80.

I received a contribution the other day from August Donath for the benefit of poor old Jack Griffin, which I was glad to forward to its destination. His old friends, as well as many who never knew him, are kindly contributing to his relief; but his necessities are still great.

* * * *

The other day I stopped Dr. D. C. Chadwick on the street and held him up for a chat, though he had in his pocket a list of at least forty places that he had to visit, he being one of the busiest physicians in the city. The Doctor's devotion to the afflictions of his former fellow-workmen and their families makes him as great a philanthropist as physician, and he will long live in the gratitnde of many whose necessities have been greater than their means.

Every few days a different victim of the Arnold gilt brick (it didn't even look like gold) enterprise is discovered, and often where you would least expect to find one. Be not cast down, brethren, but be of good cheer. The "ponies" will be here in a few days, and there will be further opportunities for investment, and though the game is not built to be beaten by men of your mental caliber, you will be given a chance to push in your dough. Let speculation thrive; the bookies need boodle.

Relief Committee Chairman J. G. Stelle's announcement at the Union last Sunday that all the unfortunates who had been under the care of his committee were either dead or at the Home created a big laugh, but it spoke eloquently of the effectiveness with which the committee does its work. Of course, if a man won't go to the Home——

There is a proposition before one of the great fraternal insurance organizations to permit a member, on arriving at the age of 65 years, to "cash in" for about one-fourth of the amount of his policy, but yielding him a considerable advance on what he has paid in. As I am approaching the meridian of life, I am in favor of such a scheme, for a man is generally free from dependents by that time and ought to be permitted to look after his own comfort. How do you stand on the question?

* * * *

Now that the Second Division scrap is settled, when are we going to move into the new building?

Dr. Jimmy Dick Bridger writes that he is getting some valuable hospital experience in New York. Dr. Bridger has the "gum" in him, and I expect to yet hear of him as a prominent physician.

Ben Shannon, I hear, has sold out his interest in the Harrisonburg and Staunton (Va.) Newses, to good advantage, and is going to South Dakota for his health.

Another new council of the National Union is being formed by Joseph Dierken, of the District Senate Committee on Extension of the Order, and among those who have given in their names are O. J. Ricketts, Frank E. Eckloff, Sandford M. Warren, W. B. Cameron, Samuel Myer, James McDonald, Morgan Brown, R. F. Brown, David Parker, George W. Nichols, A. P. Bielaski, George Peter, and a sufficient number of others to guarantee organization. There is no better insurance order than the National Union, and Dierken's name as organizer is an assurance that the council will begin work under favorable auspices.

I hear that President Cassatt says he will have the new union station completed in time for the next Presidential inauguration. There'll be something doing if he does.

A HOT TIME IN THE TOWN.

There'll be a hot time in the town
  When the streets of shade are bereft
And Old Sol in fury pours down
  His scorching rays right and left;
For surely you know, if your brain isn't slow,
  What to most minds is a plain, certain thing,
That trees pack trunks, and with boughs, bending low,
  Their respective "leaves" take every spring.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

Candidates, get a move on. There is but sixty days in which to make a canvass. Put your announcement in THE TRADES UNIONIST and get out and hustle. We always have the winners in our list.

The possible candidates for delegate down town are all laying low, like Brer Rabbit. M. J. Maher, of the Star, is spoken of as a probable candidate, and if not in the running this year will make a try for the honors in 1904 for St. Louis.

Cal Wyatt, of Pittsburg, well known as a writer on topics typographical in the Smoky City, was in the city this week. He is one of the general organizers of the A. F. of L. and was here on business connected with that organization.

W. L. Griffis, who worked on the Night Bill Force the past two sessions, and served as chairman of the Third Division Night the past winter, left last Monday for Chicago. As chairman "Shorty" made a friend of every employe of the Third Division by his uniform kindness and courtesy, and all wish him a pleasant visit and hope that he will soon return.

The cards of George P. Nichols and Stephen J. Kilduff, of Baltimore, candidates for delegate to the I. T. U. convention, to be held in this city next August, are out. The many friends of Mr. Nichols in this city will be pleased to have him here during convention week, for it goes without saying that he will be elected. Mr. Kilduff is not as well known to us as Mr. Nichols, but he has our best wishes for success.

John W. Usilton, an old-time resident of this city, and well known to the employees of the G. P. O. a score or more years ago, has returned to the city, and is now on the Times. He was a delegate to Chicago in 1893 from No. 101. He has been employed at different times in Baltimore, Chicago, and St. Louis since he left this city, coming here from the latter city.

John A. Heydler, of the Star force of operators, has resigned to take up the position of secretary of the National Baseball League. Mr. Heydler is fully qualified for the position, having been interested in baseball practically and theoretically for the past fifteen years. As a writer on baseball topics he is well known throughout the country, and the League has secured the services of an energetic and capable man in making its a selection.

Bindery Notes.

It is now reported that Bill Lang patronizes a union barber.

All persons wishing to be informed on matters of interest concerning the St. Louis Exposition should call on Meyer Cohen.

Miss V. Murphy, one of the popular young ladies in the ruling room, is very fond of dogs. Major Collins has promised her a real live one on her next birthday.

Prof. Ed. McCarthy placed his lunch one morning in his coat pocket and sat down to breakfast. In his hurry he put on another coat and at lunch time was greatly disappointed to find out he had nothing to eat.

Brother Mayberry is to resign and return to Philadelphia. His numerous friends in the Union Building and the main office will tender him a farewell dinner Saturday night at Bessler's, on Pennsylvania avenue. The Royal Blues will be present and the round up a jolly one.

Billy Kelly attended a social affair the other evening with his better half. Willie was real good and sat in a room with the ladies, drinking soda and entertaining them. Willie never did care for soda and longed for a glass of "bock" To his surprise he discovered when it was time to go home that he had not been in it, as a room for the sterner sex was in evidence with the real thing on tap.

BOWLING CHAMPIONSHIP.

The First Division, G. P. O., Defeats the Crack Second Division Team.

Thursday night (March 12) the first and second bowling teams of the First and Second Divisions met in friendly combat at the Rathskeller for the bowling championship of the G. P. O. The sole agreement between the Division captains was that the successful Division should have the privilege of "writing up" the event for THE TRADES UNIONIST. Being honored with this assignment, and knowing that the following tabulated scores and records will prove of great interest to the many bowlers and their friends all over the Office, I have gone to some trouble in obtaining them, hoping same are substantially correct.

"Time" was called at 7 30 o'clock by "Judge" Mabrey, the official scorer, and from the rolling of the first balls by Bielaski and Robinson for the first and second teams, respectively, to the conclusion of the series on both sides, the play was fast and furious, and intensely interesting to the large assemblage of both sexes in the gallery. Each good play was liberally applauded, Miller receiving the lion's share, especially in the second inning, when he had 199 chalked up to his credit—the highest score of the evening.

NOTES.

Captain Clark kept at his boys, urging them to do their best, and through his individual efforts with the pins encouraged our side to easy victory.

Bielaski was an unknown quantity, but it was only necessary for him to roll his first ball to inspire confidence in the First Division rooters.

Heisler bowled especially well in the first inning, scoring 178 points, running third in the total number scored in a single game.

Nachman usually runs up fine scores on any old alley, but did not do himself credit on this occasion. He has some excuse for his low average in having a sore thumb. Phil will make a swell bowler some day.

"Captain Jack" Robinson is another good man with a wooden ball, but he had a bad run of luck in the second game, which would have discouraged most fellows, but not "Robbie." He went after the leaders in the concluding round and did himself proud.

Jones did not bowl any high scores with his good strong arm, but his general cheerfulness and "winning ways" won over the crowd, and they applauded him just the same.

Etchberger is a husky lad and bowled well for a beginner. Look for his name in the swell-class column next year.

Harward is O. K., but was unlucky on this occasion. He can and will do better the next time out.

Martin is a good clean deliverer of the ball, and, being only a beginner, this augers well for him. A few games more will find him in Class A, for, after all, practice is the thing that counts.

For the Second Division boys much can be said; and I am not willing to pass them over without a faint attempt at encouragement. Both teams contain good average bowlers, and, owing to the closeness of their scores, it is difficult to pick out the real leaders. They are all fine fellows and game to the core. They naturally expected to wipe up the floor, figuratively speaking, with Foreman Roberts' henchmen, having been organized some time previous to the teams of the First. In this conclusion, however, double disappointment was theirs.

Smith is a wonder for so small a man. He delivers the ball perfectly from a high swing and with surprising velocity. His high score was 180

Richards is a graceful bowler, and Nobles and Sherman are real good.

One hundred and forty-three points separated the highest score from the lowest of the First Division first team, while there was only a difference of 20 of the Second's men. This shows that the former club is a little unbalanced. Miller would apparently add strength to Captain Clark's side.

The following records are produced by unanimous request and speak for themselves:

Bennings Races.

The spring meeting of the Washington Jockey Club will be inaugurated Monday, March 23. To the lovers of the horse the coming meeting will be one of extreme interest, as the horses that will start at this meeting are of the highest class. This is the opening of the racing season in the East, and horsemen from all parts of the country will be present.

The liberal management of the Washington Jockey Club brings the best owners of the country to a course where the racing has always been clean and honest.

Superintendent Strahan reports that he has applications for more stabling than he can accommodate, and a great many owners will be compelled to go outside the grounds for stable accommodations. Over 700 horses will be present at this meeting.

Secretary Dangerfield has been kept busy at his headquarters in The Barton attending to the detail necessary in conducting an enterprise calling for judgment in the reception of applications for entrance to the grounds from horsemen all over the country. Only the reputable class of horsemen have been admitted, and a good meeting is anticipated.

Union Printers' Home.

The report of Superintendent Deacon for the month of February shows that $1,842.47 was expended for maintenance. In the present additions and repairs at the Home the amount expended during February amounted to $2,439.56.

The cost per inmate for the past month was $24 95 as against $31.97 in January. As February was a short month the average is about the same as the preceding month.

An effort has been made by Superintendent Deacon and the resident trustee, Mr. McCaffery, to secure title to 240 acres that the Home now has under lease from the State. In this connection it appears that the Colorado Legislature has a bill on the calendar authorizing the Land Board to extend all leases for fifty years. This measure would be acceptable to the Board of Trustees and it is hoped that it will become a law.

During the month of February the average cost per month per resident amounted to 8½ cents. Number of residents during the month, 114. In the same period there were five admissions and one death.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Considerable Business of Importance Transacted at Last Meeting.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades was called to order promptly at 8 p. m., Tuesday, March 17, at Typographical Temple, Vice Chairman Gerden in the chair.

Roll call disclosed the presence of twenty-two delegates representing fourteen local unions.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

CREDENTIALS

Credentials were received from Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, No. 884, certifying to F. Nolte, and W. F. Zirkle. The delegates were seated.

The credentials of D. Conner and Adam Campbell, from Stone and Marble Cutters' Union, were referred to a committee consisting of G. E. Allison and E. M. Van Ness.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The Secretary was instructed to forward to the Central Labor Union the resolution adopted by this body January 6, 1903, as follows:

"WHEREAS, It was for the best interests of the building trades allied with the Central Labor Union that the Council of Allied Building Trades was formed and the universal card system adopted; and

"WHEREAS, Our efforts to enforce this card have been hampered and hindered by the action of certain trades who are allied with the Central Labor Union, but not with the Council of Allied Building Trades; therefore be it

"Resolved, That no organization be permitted representation in the Council of Allied Building Trades that does not carry the card and abide by the laws and rules governing the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union.

The Secretary was directed to again write the plumbers, sheet metal workers, painters (368) and paperhangers (420) unions to affiliate with the Council.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted and ordered sent to the Central Labor Union:

"WHEREAS, A recent statement having been made by a committee representing D.A. 66, K. of L., and published in the daily press of the city, relative to a so-called organization of metal lathers and against the interests of Wood, Wire and Metal Lathers, Local Union No. 9, affiliated with the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union; and

"WHEREAS, Some of the signers on said committee are members of organizations bearing allegiance to and represented in the Central Labor Union; thererore be it

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union present to the Central Labor Union for adoption the following:

"That the Central Labor Union expunge from its roster all unions now allied who are in any way affiliated or bear allegiance to any body antagonistic or opposed to the principles as laid down in the Constitution of the Central Labor Union and Council of Allied Building Trades; and be it

"Resolved, further, That no organization be allowed representation in the Central Labor Union which retains in its membership any person or persons antagonistic to the Central Labor Union by their connection with the Knights of Labor or a so-called Building Trades Council."

CALL OF UNIONS.

The machinists reported the calling out of five men at E. H. Catlin & Co. on enforcement of the eight-hour day.

The delegates from Marble Mosaic and Granito Workers Union, No. 8702, reported that all efforts have failed in securing the signing of an agreement with National Mosaic Company and Messino & Crorotta. Referred to the Business Agent.

Delegates from Steam Fitters, No. 10, reported that differences with Yale Laundry was still unsettled.

Brotherhood of Carpenters report Hecht & Co. unfair in remodeling of building 519 Seventh Street northwest.

Hoisting Engineers, No. 77, reported failure to settle their grievances with the Southern Expanded Metal Company.

The assistance of all building trades in the United States is to be asked to refuse to handle material covered by the patents controlled by the Southern Expanded Metal Company until the trouble now on hand with that corporation on the Portner Flats is settled.

The following resolution was adopted at the meeting held on Tuesday, March 10:

"WHEREAS, On Tuesday, March 3, 1903, sixty-five union men employed on the Portner Flats refused to work on account of the attempt of the Southern Expanded Metal Company to introduce 'scab' labor on that job; and

"WHEREAS, Twenty of the men who thus refused to work under said conditions were members of Bricklayers' Union, No. 1, and one member of Journeymen Gasfitters and Plumbers Union, No. 1, who are not affiliated with the Council of Allied Building Trades; therefore be it

"Resolved, That this Council extends to the members of Bricklayers' Union, No. 1, and Journeymen Gasfitters and Plumbers Union, No. 1, a vote of thanks for their action in this matter, thereby exemplifying the old union adage, 'That the concern of one is the concern of all;' and be it

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon the minutes and a copy sent Bricklayers' Union, No. 1, and Journeymen Gasfitters and Plumbers' Union, No. 1.

Obituary.

Charles H. Walker, bookbindcr, who died March 15, 1903, at his home, 19 K street northeast, of apoplexy, joined the Journeymen Bookbinders' Union, of Washington, April, 1869. The death of Mr. Walker has removed from the Bindery one of our oldest members, a good union man, and a first-class workman. His nature was kindly and his intercourse with his fellow-workmen was marked by the greatest affability and courtesy. He enjoyed the confidence and respect of all, and of him dead it might well be said:

Now is the stately column broke,
The beacon light is quenched in smoke;
The trumpet's silver voice is still—
The warder silent on the hill.

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. VII. No. 41. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1903. Price, 3 Cents.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

The Session Short, but Important Business Was Transacted.

SPEEDY OUTLET CO. ENTERTAIN

Amendment to By-Laws of Building Trades Council Approved—Contract Signed with the Southern Expanded Metal Co.—Social Entertainment After Adjournment.

The regular meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 7:15 p. m. last Monday, Vice-President Sherman in the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The Grievance Committee reported that Chas. C. McCauley, 27 H street northeast, grocer, had signed a contract with Grocery Clerks Union, No. 533.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Council of Allied Building Trades, stating the following amendment to section 4, Article III, of the by-laws of that organization had been adopted and asked the approval of same by Central Labor Union:

"That no organization be permitted representation in the Council of Allied Building Trades which will not take out current working cards and abide by the laws and rules of the Council of Allied Building Trades."

The amendment was approved.

A communication relative to the game of baseball played at River View on last Labor Day was referred to the Executive Committee.

CALL OF UNIONS.

The Sheet Metal Workers reported that a fine of $5 would be imposed on all its members who violated the boycott on the Academy of Music.

The Theatrical Stage Alliance delegates called attention to the boycott on the Academy of Music and urged all delegates to push the boycott through their unions.

Business Agent E. J. Kanigan, from the Council of Allied Building Trades of Central Labor Union, reported that the trouble on the Portner Flats had been adjusted by the signing of a contract with the Southern Expanded Metal Company, and that all the men employed as expanded metal workers by that firm had joined Wood, Wire and Metal Workers Union, No. 9

The Ice Wagon Drivers, Local 430, T. D. I. U., submitted an agreement for approval of the central body. Referred to Contract Committee.

After being in session nearly one hour the Central Labor Union adjourned and the hall was turned over to the Retail Clerks, No. 264, for an entertainment given by that union through the Speedy Outlet Company, to which all members of the Council were invited. The occasion was one of pleasure and thoroughly enjoyed by all present. Refreshments and dancing were indulged in and the entertainment concluded at a late hour.

"Big Six's" Annual Ball.

Through the kindness of George W. Morris, of the Commercial-Advertiser, New York City, we received a handsome lithographic hanger announcing the fifty-third annual ball and reception to be given by New York Typographical Union, No. 6, April 22, 1903, at Grand Central Palace. The design is perfect and comprises a good picture of the late Amos J. Cummings at the top, and at the bottom the three important periods in his life—printer, editor, and statesman—pictured to life. As the proceeds of the entertainment will be devoted to the Cummings' Memorial Fund, the committee in charge have chosen a good medium for calling general attention to the ball and reception. Mr. Morris is a member of the committee and is also a candidate for the caucus nomination for delegate to the I. T. U. before the Administration party, on Sunday, April 26, 1903. He has a host of friends in this city who wish him success in his canvass.

An Interesting Contest.

The contest among the candidates for delegate to represent Feeders and Assistants' Union, No. 42, at the convention of the I. P. P. and A. U., to be held at Cincinnati next June, is warming up. The election will be held Thursday, April 2, and the down-town candidates are Miss Alice C. Trundle and Messrs. Devine, Leane, Knapp, and Driscoll. Four delegates are to be elected. At this writing it looks like the delegation will be chosen two from Government employes and two from "down town."

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

The Anthracite Coal Strike Arbitration Commission's award, while not giving the miners all that they asked, is a substantial victory for organized labor. It seems rather amusing that the Commission refused to make recognition of the Mine Workers' Union one of the awards, in view of the fact that they themselves recognize it in every line of the decision, even going so far as to deprecate permitting young boys to vote at union meetings. Baer and his associates practically recognized the union all through the proceedings, though insisting that they did not do so. I am glad now that I did not "roast" Judge Gray, the chairman of the Commission, as it was suggested that I should do some weeks ago, when exception was taken to some course of his in the investigation. It might have prejudiced the miners' case, as one result, and as another probably would have ruined the Judge's entire future career. I am getting very careful how I blast reputations.

Friends of Wm. S. Waudby, an old member of the International Typographical Union, are suggesting him as the successor of Carroll D. Wright on that official's announced retirement as Commissioner of the United States Department of Labor. Mr. Waudby has been connected with the department as special agent and statistician for many years, and besides this recommendation for fitness as the head of the department it is contended that as a trade unionist his selection should be urged because no representative labor man has yet held the important position.—New York Journal.

The appointment of Mr. Waudby as Commissioner of Labor would give great satisfaction to the members of Columbia Union, not only personally—for many of them know him well—but because he has the ability and has had the experience to conduct the office acceptably to the workingmen of this country. I think the trades unions are entitled to this position for the same reason that one interested in and acquainted with agriculture is chosen as the head of the Agricultural Department and that some one connected with marine matters is put in charge of seafaring interests, etc. Mr. Waudby is a close student of economic matters and an able writer on labor questions, and would go to the office fully equipped for all its duties.

The month of March, so fatal to tuberculous cases and probably the most dangerous month of the year, is almost over. I have come to sympathize with the feelings of the old lady, who said she was glad March was over, because it is such an unhealthy month, and she had noticed in her past experience that if she lived through the month of March she lived through the rest of the year.

EDUCATIONAL DOGGEREL.

Some mispronounce "advertisement,"
And though I think no hurt is meant,
  Accenting the "tise"
  I surely despise
E'en in an intelligent thirty-cent.

To mispronounce "abdomen"
Is a very ominous omen;
  To make a fierce stab
  At the a-b "ab"
Declares you of English a foeman.

Another word is "hymeneal,"
Which often the organ laryngeal
  Hurls out as "hyme'-neal,"
  Which is really venial;
It ought to rhyme with the word "real."

To properly sound the word "heinous"
Will but a moment detain us;
  It has syllables two,
  Which if everyone knew
We'd ne'er have critics arraign us.

Then if you use the word "squalor,"
Don't mispronounce like a sailor;
  Call the objective "squalid"—
  In that you'll be "solid,"
But the noun makes a rhyme for "tailor."

If you've a friend whose case pathetic
Is properly called "paretic,"
  His disease, "paresis,"
  My sweet fairy miss,
Don't mangle in a way energetic.

The Anglo-Latin word "quasi"
Now frankly to your face I
  Call attention;
  Avoid dissension;
By sounding it right you'll be "ace high."

I saw a letter from E. E. Gessler the other day. He is chief of the proof-reading division of the Philippine Government Printing Office, at a comfortable salary, and both he and Mrs. Gessler like the Philippines very much. He says everybody is satisfied and pleased with matters there. He also says there are some nice $2,000 jobs in the islands for those who know how to go to work to get them—not connected with the printing office, I took it. The Philippine Islands are like every other proposition in this world, I suppose—not so bad as its enemies nor so good as its friends paint it. The truth seems to lie in a compromise in everything.

Many friends in this city will learn with sorrow of the death of William S. Waudby's eldest son, Earle C., aged 20, which occurred at Denver on March 10, after a brief illness. In the enforced absence of Mr. Waudby from his boy's death bed, William E. Shields took his place as far as possible, superintended the funeral, and in every way showed himself a noble friend in the hour of need. Mr. and Mrs. A. J. E. Hubbard were among those who attended the funeral.

The nomination of Maj. A. W. Edwards to be consul at Montreal, Canada, brings to mind the fact that I knew the Major in Topeka along in 1868-9. He was a member of the firm of Prouty, Davis & Edwards that established the Commonwealth, and he had come from Carlinville, Macoupin County, Illinois—a town that has produced and sent out more printers than any other town in the world, except Belfountain, Ohio. The Major's duty was to conduct the city department and look important, but he detracted somewhat from his importance by heading his page "G. Washington Brick, Local Editor"—a witticism even then overworked. Col. S. S. Prouty's job was to write the heavy editorials and look important, while it was up to Colonel Davis to manage the business and look important. The avoirdupois of the trio was about 800 pounds, not weighing their importance. I think the firm held together nearly a year, when it disintegrated. Afterwards Prouty went to heaven and Edwards to North Dakota. I don't know where Davis went. I didn't know him very well any way. I've been hearing of Edwards off and on for the past ten or fifteen years by way of Shelby Smith and E. B. Chambers. Now he belongs to the world.

Mr. McPike, in THE TRADES UNIONIST last week, and Mr. Donath, in the Typographical Journal for March, have taken a fall out of me, incidentally, in setting forth the generosity of the Star company to its employees, all because I had written a paragraph to the effect that that paper, never before favorable to organized labor, had taken the side of the miners in the recent coal strike. What they say is strictly true in regard to the excellent understanding between the Star and its printer (and perhaps other) employees and the acts of kindness done by the management in cases of distress, and I have on at least two occasions feebly described the splendid accommodations which have been provided for the comfort of the men. But in its editorial and news columns it shows a disposition on all occasions to place strikers in their worst light, to belittle the demands of union men in other occupations, and to characterize as ridiculous or unjust their claims. The flat and stale "walking delegate" joke does frequent service. These are matters that neither Mr. D. nor Mr. McP. touches upon, as I did not say anything contrary to the assertions made by them. The Star is unusually generous in its treatment of its employees, and the Star seeks to cater to its wealthy patrons by sneering at trades unionists. As a reader of the Star for many years, I know what I am writing about.

There are honest fishermen as well as liars who fish, and among the former Dave Walton, of the Fifth, was one time a shining light. I reckon Dave was one of the most honest fishermen the Potomac ever knew. When he came home with a string of fish he was always willing to tell you about them. He never denied that he had caught fish, and he not only could tell the weight of the fish he caught, but to an ounce that of those he struck and lost. It used to be admitted that he had missed catching bigger fish than any other man on the river. He took Walter Chase with him once—about seventeen or eighteen years ago. Chase was not so much stuck on the truth as Dave, and when he came back he tried to blacken Dave's reputation—not by a straightforward assertion, but by insinuation and innuendo. They had had very poor success all morning, and Walter said that he grew tired during the day and laid down to take a nap. Before going to sleep he saw a boy coming by with a string of big fish. When he awoke the boy was just leaving, without any fish, and Dave had just caught three or four fine ones. Of course the boy might have thrown his fish away or sold them to somebody, and it was nothing remarkable that the fish began to bite just at that moment. I've seen Dave catch fish myself—one. He caught that with a revolver, and it wasn't very big. Lots bigger ones have got away from him many a time. There were so many liars among fishermen that Dave quit some years ago.

As quite a number of the members of the Ex-Delegates' Association have never done anything to forward the objects of that organization except to hand in their names, I hear that something will be done in the near future to clear away the dead wood. This little hint will be a reminder for those who have been remiss through carelessness or oversight; as for the others, the sooner they're dropped, the sooner we'll know "where we're at."

* * * *

Is not the thought that the 25 or 50 cents or a dollar which you have contributed in a case of distress has made easier the dying hour of a fellow-workman and prevented his widow and children from being harassed and embarrassed by immediate necessities an ample return for your investment, and do you not sleep the better for it? There is scarcely one of us who gives away in the course of a year enough to buy a decent hat or pair of shoes, and there are comparatively few of us who have the means to pay the expense of a three months' sickness. This may be improvidence or imprudence on our part, but that fact does not soften the teeth of the wolf when he comes. What a thought it must be at the end of life, "I never was of any benefit to anyone but myself!"

As the campaign is near at hand, notwithstanding no more candidates have announced themselves than enough to fill the offices, I will give out a little information for the benefit of whatever there may be. There are two offices which will not permit candidates to talk with their men except at the noon hour—McGill & Wallace's and Cadick's Globe Printing Office. Last year I tackled the former twice, each time meeting Mr. Wallace in the business office.

"I would like to go to your composing room, sir," said I, airily, at the second interview, the first having been unsatisfactory.

"What do you want to go to my composing room for?" he asked, in a long, low, rakish voice.

"To try to induce your men to vote for me for delegate," I answered, with suppressed feeling.

"You can't go to the composing room except at the noon hour," said he, watching me narrowly.

"I have no time to go at the noon hour," I replied, throwing a world of fine scorn into these few words.

"You can go at no other time," said he, truculently.

"Then I will not go at all," was my raucous response.

"I will send your cards up," he hissed between his clenched teeth.

"That for your offer," I vociferated, defiantly hurling into his hands the pasteboards.

I didn't get a vote there.

If you haven't got your dependents protected by insurance you can't do better than to give your name to Joseph Dierken and join the new National Union council he is organizing. There is no better fraternal insurance order than this. "He who provided not for his own household," after his death as well as before, is no better than a fiddler.

By the death of Noble D. Larner one of the most noted of Washington's former printers has passed away. In his younger days, until about 1860, he was a compositor on the Globe and in other Washington printing offices of a half century ago. It was in Freemasonry, though he was a prominent business man, that he achieved his greatest distinction, having been Grand Master, Grand High Priest, and Grand Commander of the District of Columbia, and General Grand High Priest of the United States, one of the two positions in which the jurisdiction is coextensive with that of the United States, the other being Grand Master of Knights Templar.

William Briggs received a letter from Pete Oberly a few days ago containing a request for certain literature. He is still one of the ornaments of Park Row, New York, a fact that his many friends here will be glad to know, as some of them have been under the impression that he is dead.

In the absence of Mr. Palmer from the city, Chief Clerk H. T. Brian is Acting Public Printer, rounding out his career by having filled every position from compositor to the top, his knowledge of every detail of the office, acquired by thirty years' service, making him as well equipped for the upper as it did for the lower stations. It is the hope of his friends that he may yet serve as Public Printer "in his own right," and he is young enough yet for that to be among the strong probabilities.

The memorial resolutions in honor of the late Chief Clerk Collins, passed by the night chapels, so magnificently engrossed by Mr. J. W. Swank, have been bound in sealskin, lined with watered silk, placed in an appropriate case, and presented by the various chairmen, acting as a committee, to Mrs. Collins.

A. F. BLOOMER.

"Offte's Bouquet."

The title given to the new brand of cigars put forth by our friend, H. T. Offterdinger, 504 Ninth street northwest, carries the well-know abbreviation of this popular cigarmaker and dealer. For a good smoke, made under clean, sanitary conditions, by Union men, we commend the various brands made by this factory.

There was a young man from Marquette
Who ne'er in his life had smoked yet,
  Till a friend called one day
  Smoking an "Offte's Bouquet,"
And he started in then you can bet.

Andrew Keiner.

Andrew Keiner, whose death on March 15 was briefly referred to last week, was formerly of Rome and Utica, N. Y. He was born in the town of Vienna, N. Y., January 21, 1868, and so was 35 years of age. When but 12 years old he went to Canastota and there served his apprenticeship on the Bee. From there he went to Rome, where he worked for eight years on the Sentinel. He next went to Utica, working for a time on the Press, and later as foreman of the Daily Union. About eight years ago he came to Washington and worked several years in different divisions of the Government Printing Office, for the last two or three years as a proofreader on Specifications, and was a very capable workman in every branch of the trade.

Mr. Keiner was a Mason and Senior Warden of his lodge, Columbia, No. 3, and had been an Odd Fellow, a Red Man, and an Eagle. His funeral, on March 17, was under the auspices of his Masonic lodge, and his remains were interred in Glenwood Cemetery. Besides his widow, he is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Keiner, of Utica; a brother, Fred Keiner, of Utica; and two sisters, Mrs. J. A. Murphy, of Norwich, N. Y., and Mrs. M. J. Sweeney, of Utica.

Just a week before Mr. Keiner's death, his mother-in law, Mrs. John Mulholland, who was residing with him, passed away, and her remains were carried to Utica for burial.

Mr. Keiner was a man of most genial, obliging disposition, and one who will be much missed among a circle of friends almost as wide as his acquaintance.

The Death of B. F. Cullen.

B. F. Cullen, late of the Post composing room, died at El Paso, Tex., last Friday of tuberculosis. Mr. Cullen left here in the early part of last winter and went to Albuquerque, N. Mex., where it was thought he might regain his health. He left there subsequently and went to El Paso, Tex., where his death occurred as stated. As chairmen of the Post chapel, Mr. Cullen always maintained an active interest in union affairs until ill health prevented him from further activity in that direction. His remains were sent to South Carolina for interment.

Fifth Division.

George R. Boone has returned to his summer job on the makeup bank.

P. M. McCallum and Ed. Stough were absent a few days on account of sickness.

Ed. Heidingsfeld made another one of his flying visits to New York the fore part of this week.

W. D. Skeen, from the Record room, is trying his hand at typesetting again. He heads our list as slug 1.

Contributions for charity amounting to $30 on one pay day in one division shows that the spirit of generosity is still abroad.

George E. Breitenbach and Constantine E. La Vigne, probationers, were elected to membership in the Union last meeting.

Griffith Evans was transferred to the Nautical Almanac work, where he is busying himself in arranging the stars and receiving messages from Mars.

L. P. Kenney, from the Record force, and J. W. Mathers, who made up the bound volumes of the Record, were assigned to duty in the "Y."

W. J. Dow returned to his old place as assistant to Mr. Bowen last Monday, the Day Record, of which he had charge during the winter, having been absorbed by the force that came over from the night side.

At various times have members of our craft served their country in the halls of Congress and thereby honored the printing profession. But in the nature of things all can not be President, nor can all be United States Representatives. Some aspirants, though no less worthy, fail to attain their goal. We have with us one of the latter. For further information, see some of the "Y"-men.

With the approach of our annual election it is well to cast about for candidates, and in doing so this chapel should not be overlooked. Candidates from the Fifth, for whatever office, have always been successful. The following come to mind as we write: E. C. Jones, first election to the presidency of Columbia Union; J. S. Leech and C. E. Holmes, delegates to the Detroit convention; E. A. M. Lawson, twice President of 101; A. W. Bowen, delegate to the Milwaukee convention; William M. Leavitt, delegate to the Birmingham convention; and A. J. E. Hubbard, a number of times as member of the auditing committee of Columbia Union. The Fifth is justly proud of this array of talent, and it should be encouragement to others among us to give the Union the benefit of our services. In the meantime we will endorse the name of Harry O'Donnell, of the Agricultural Branch, and Jos. G. Stelle, of the Job Room, as candidates for delegates to the I. T. U. Though not members of the Fifth at present, they were at one time on our rolls, which, together with their personal worth, should, and no doubt will, win for them the full support of this chapel.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES

Important Business Meeting of the Council on Tuesday Night.

THE YALE LAUNDRY BOYCOTT

Committee on Hall Make a Report—F. P. Weller to Be Reasoned with by Machinists—Agreement with the Southern Expanded Metal Company Presented.

The regular meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union convened in due form on Tuesday evening at the regular hour.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Communications were received from the Slate and Tile Roofers' Union, No. 10421, relative to cards and furnishing lists of fair firms.

Also from Steam and Hot Water Fitters and Helpers, No. 28, relative to employment of a helper on the Colorado Building without a working card, and also asking for information relative to increase of price of card.

Also from Carpenters' Union, No. 884, relative to finances of the Council.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

From Central Labor Union reporting that that body had approved the resolution adopted by this body on January 6, 1903, as follows:

WHEREAS, It was for the best interests of the building trades allied with the Central Labor Union that the Council of Allied Building Trades was formed and the universal card system adopted; and

WHEREAS, Our efforts to enforce this card have been hampered and hindered by the action of certain trades who are allied with the Central Labor Union, but not with the Council of Allied Building Trades; therefore be it

Resolved, That no organization be permitted representation in the Council of Allied Building Trades that does not carry the card and abide by the laws and rules governing the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union.

The Hall Committee reported that negotiations were on foot to lease a building which would contain three large halls, one small hall, besides a secretary's office and committee rooms for use of occupants. The committee further reported that a circular letter on this subject was in course of preparation to be sent to the building trades unions.

The committee appointed to visit F. P. Weller, druggist, Eighth and I streets southeast, relative to the Yale Laundry, reported that "it was up to the Machinists to convince Mr. Weller that their money was good money." The secretary was directed to communicate with Columbia Lodge of Machinists requesting them to take such action as would result in their members withholding their patronage from F. P. Weller until the Yale Laundry settled their grievances with Steam Fitters' Union, No. 10.

The Business Agent presented the agreement entered into with the Southern Expanded Metal Company and the Central Labor Union, which, after considerable discussion, was approved.

The trouble between Marble Mosaic and Granito Workers' Union and Massino & Crorotti was referred to the Business Agent for settlement.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Engineers reported that no settlement had been reached with their union and the Southern Expanded Metal Company.

Hod Carriers reported that nonunion hod carriers were at work on Willard Hotel.

Interior Marble Workers, No. 5, reported that no settlement had been reached with the Tile Layers' Union.

Machinists reported strike still on at shop of E. H. Catlin & Co.

Marble Workers and Polishers protested against members of Stone Laborers' Union taking up their work. Referred to Stone Laborers' Union.

George A. Malone was appointed a committee to act with Tile Layers and Marble Workers.

A. B. C.

The first lessons in life are preceded with the knowledge of the alphabet, commonly called the a, b, c. To all union men and friends of organized labor the lessons of unionism should be exemplified in the A. B. C. Made under strictly union conditions the product of the Arlington Brewing Company should be used by all who indulge in the cup that cheers but does not inebriate. We call attention to the product of this company as being absolutely pure, having received the commendation of the Government chemist. Try a glass of "Bock," and ask your man "behind the bar" for A. B. C. beer.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL WASHINGTON. 2

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1903.

I would as soon think of doing business without clerks as without advertising.
—JOHN WANAMAKER.

Nothing, except the mint, can make money without advertising.
—GLADSTONE.

When you pay more for the rent of your business house than for advertising your business, you are pursuing a false policy. If you can do business, let it be known.

The Cummings Memorial.

The Amos J. Cummings Memorial Committee have issued a neat letter circular to the craft at large calling attention to the work outlined by the committee. It is believed that the memorial will be placed at the Union Printers' Home. The committee are of opinion that the cost of the memorial will not exceed $12,000. In order to assist in the undertaking, THE TRADES UNIONIST will acknowledge any amount placed in its keeping to be sent to Secretary BRAMWOOD at Indianapolis.

Subscriptions can be handed to the chairmen of chapels, who will be pleased to turn the same over to this office, where proper acknowledgment will be made in the columns of this paper. Remember that the proportionate share of Columbia Typographical Union will be about $500. This would be about 25 cents per capita. Of course all will not give, but all that desire to give can turn their contribution in through this channel and feel assured of it being forwarded to Secretary BRAMWOOD.

The Coal Strike Commission.

The report of the Commission that investigated the conditions of the miners in the anthracite regions of Pennsylvania was well received in labor circles. The result has been a gain for the workers in the mines, and while the Commission refrained from giving recognition to the miners' union a practical concession of all the points involved in the late strike that were advanced by the union, through their representatives, makes it apparent that all the recognition asked for was clearly embodied in the points at issue.

The findings of the Commission will have a far reaching effect on the labor movement and will make a new era in the future settlement of trouble that may arise between large corporate bodies that employ an army of workers and the trades unions of this country. The day of big strikes on the railroads of this country will be a thing of the past. Arbitration will take the place of contention and strife for the mastery through the strike, and a brighter day is dawning for the toilers in the ranks of organized labor.

As to the nonunion man, he will, like the poor, be always with us to serve as an object lesson to future generations of wage-earners, as a drone in the hive who waits for his industrious mates to create better conditions for themselves that he may get a share without aiding in the creation of such conditions. The sorry figure that the representatives of the nonunionists cut in the proceedings before the Coal Strike Commission, with legal talent paid for by the operators, shows conclusively how little they are considered in the general reckoning of settlements. Used as tools in time of trouble, the employer casts them off when the occasion for their employment is closed by a settlement with an organization that has a representative head.

The settlement of the trouble through the Commission is to be considered one of the best acts of President ROOSEVELT's administration. To have failed would have been a reflection on his judgment and probity, and, having accomplished the purpose sought, too much praise can not be given to him for his steadfastness in the matter in the face of the opposition of some of his closest advisers.

A BIT OF ALL SORTS.

If you are neglecting to read "Col. Monroe's" articles in the Sunday Post you are missing a treat.

"Tip" Hoy has vacated the old stand at Eighth and D streets. What'll the old place be without Robby?

A type-foundry agent told me recently his firm sold more pounds of type in 1902 than in any year since they have been in the business. Sounds strange, don't it?

I saw a group photo of the employees of the Government Printing Office at Manila the other day. Looked like the people employed around some summer resort hotel.

Sam Mayberry, a very popular bookbinder of the Union branch, has resigned to accept a more lucrative position in his native town of Philadelphia. There are several Quakers in the office still who are not going to resign.

Jim Typo toiled all winter long
His fortunes to recoup;
The Benning's meeting in the fall
Had put him in the soup.
And now he's ready, with his roll,
The lesson's been in vain;
And ten to one a week out there
Will find him in again.

Mordecai Hyams, the young tar-heel who manipulates the galley proof-press for the Spess force, has been rewarded with a substantial increase in salary by the Public Printer. The work is worth all the increase given him as it is one the toughest jobs in the shop, and "Mord" is energetic and obliging and good natured with all.

Mrs. Amanda Gormley, of the "Spess" press-room, celebrated her seventieth birthday on the 22d inst., and looks good to round out many more years in the service. There is no more popular person in the office with all who know her, her many acts of kindness and charity having endeared her to all.

If Baltimore Union don't send my friend George Nichols as a delegate this year—but what's the use of talking, they are going to do it. They are good people, and they know there is no better or more deserving man in the jurisdiction of the I. T. U., and they know that in honoring him they are reflecting credit not only on their own Union but on the craft at large.

The job printers of this city have certainly made good improvements in the last two years. When the Pressmen's convention was brought here two years ago doubt was expressed as to the ability of the local printers to get out their souvenir in a style equal to what they expected, but to-day I would not hesitate to place a more pretentious job than that with half a dozen firms I could name.

Col. Lorin D. Bumpus, who has been a member of the watch force at the Union building for a number of years, has been selected as captain of the watch force of the new Department of Commerce by Secretary Cortelyou. Col. Bumpus entered the Union army during the civil war a boy and rose to the rank of colonel through merit and his action. He is a polished campaign orator and has done good work in many campaigns for his party. He is a genial and companionable gentleman, and his many friends throughout the office and elsewhere are well pleased at his merited promotion.

Baltimore and Detroit are posing as two cities "without graft," and one of our local papers chimes in with the claim that this city is ne plus ultra the perfect city in purity of government. Mebbe so! But "graft" is not confined to police blackmail nor to city contracts. It is not very long ago that the powers that be were accused of making millions out of the enhanced value of property in the northwest by street improvements, and many an honest penny is turned by the excise law that compels the saloon-keeper to get the signatures of his neighbors each year before he can get a license.

Two of Columbia Union's delegates to Montreal, just thirty years ago, are still active and efficient members of the Union to-day. Both have served the Union faithfully and well in many capacities and in many trying moments, and both are deserving of any honor the Union may be able to bestow. Both are the peers of any member as to ability and energy to accomplish any work necessary to be done, and it would be a handsome and courtly act to send these two gentlemen to the next convention without the unseemly and belittling scramble that has prevailed for years. They are Capt. C. M. Robinson and Capt. W. R. Ramsey.

Frank Kidd made a suggestion recently that I heartily seconded. That was to give the printing of the International souvenir to Henry Shepard, of the Inland Printer, with instructions to get out the very handsomest piece of printing his office is capable of. And maybe it wouldn't be a beauty! It is too late, perhaps, to do it this year, and each city has its local pride in such matters that would be hard to overcome, but it is, or should be, an International publication, and all must admit that the Inland people are the equal, if not the superiors, of any printers in the world, and the I. T. U. should have nothing but the very best, and you mark my prediction that Kidd's suggestion will be carried out one of these days.

Why this talk of going out of the city to get a chief of the fire department, or resurrecting some fossil who has been buried in one of the departments for a score of years? What's the matter with Billy Bell? By all that is right and just, and by the civil service law, he is entitled to the position, and should have it. He may not be a business man, and may not be able to lead the german or grace the drawing-room, but he is a practical fireman, has gained his present position by hard work and faithful service, has the goodwill and respect of all his men and all the people, and should be made chief of the department without any more ado. I believe Congress intended he should be given the place when they legislated the newspaper-made chief out of office, and the District Commissioners should carry out the orders of their superior.

The cart-tail orator is quite an institution in New York, and I have listened to many a talk by these fellows that would compare very favorably with much that is heard on the hustings by men of prominence in political affairs. I was attracted one night during the last Presidential campaign by one of these fellows who was speaking from a truck at the north side of Cooper Institute; and stopping to listen I was puzzled for some time to remember who he was. He was speaking for Bryan, and his audience was with him to a man, cheering him to the echo, and urging him on by every manifestation of approval of his argument. When he concluded I spoke to him, and he knew me at once, although we had not met in many years. He was J. R. Armstrong (known here as "Dirty-Shirt" Armstrong) employed as a compositor in the G. P. O. at one time, and one of the orators of the old Washington Federation of Labor in the days of Isador Cohen, Jack Hamilton, et al. He told me he had not followed the printing business for some years, but was the organizer of the Electrical Workers' Union, and said he was in demand as a speaker in every campaign, which I could well believe.

During the Defrees' adminstration of the Government Printing Office I was returning to Washington with a companion, and we struck the Chicago train at Newark, Ohio. On the train were two printers well known over the country, and they looked like they had traveled on an emigrant train across the continent. They were well fortified with booze internally and externally, and a combination of onions and asafœtida would have been an improvement on the breath of either one. They reloaded their artillery at Grafton, and just had a jolly time, offering their bottles to all in the car. Old Man Defrees had a country residence at Berkeley Springs, W. Va., and he got in our car at that place and took a seat. My companion informed the two boozers who he was, and much to our astonishment one of them took a seat beside him and the other just in his rear, and engaged him in conversation. They had him where he could not get out, and they kept him in range of their distillery perfume all the way to Washington. Whether they had ever met him before I know not, but a few days thereafter I was astonished to learn that both had been appointed to positions in the office, one as proof-reader. And I believe one of them is there yet, the other being dead.

The honors thrust upon my old and much esteemed friend, August Donath, by Columbia Union recently, and they were deserved, too, I want to suggest, recalls a little incident I'll take occasion to relate. Harvey Ellis and myself were on the way to one of the I. T. U. conventions. Why we did not go with the delegation I do not now remember, and we found that "Dony" was on the same train, but had accommodations in another sleeper. We were pretty well fortified with the necessaries that make traveling in one of Mr. Pullman's cabooses comfortable, and we whiled away the hours up to midnight discussing matters of state, when the train stopped, and "Dony" concluded it was time to turn in, and bid us good night. In a few moments he returned with the information that his car had been cut off from our train, being scheduled to go from there by another route, and worst of all they had carried off his "grip," which contained not only his clothing, but his money and his railroad passes. Like all good newspaper men, the thought of paying railroad fare worried him greatly, but we got the conductor to telegraph after the missing belongings, took him in with us and made him comfortable, and when we reached our destination found his grip and all safe, and he has assured me he has always carried his passes safely in his inside pocket ever since.

Many of my readers will no doubt recall Jim Webster. I always thought that if Mr. Lincoln had ever come across Jim he would have presented him with that Barlow knife. I think the last time I saw him was over in New York about four years ago. It was in the morning, after getting out one of the big dailies, and quite a bunch were gathered around the tables in a rear room of one of the best known places on Park Row, and Handsome Jim entered. I had not seen him for years, but I recognized him, and he sat down at the table with me. He was about the worst-looking ever. He had on one of those suits of clothes that look like they are made out of straw of no particular color, a hat that was so many shapes that it must have been the pattern for some of these bonnets the dudes were wearing last year; he had a week or more of stubble on his face, which, combined with the knots and bumps he continually wore, added not a little to his natural beauty, and he was wet—had been out all night in the rain. With his native modesty he suggested it was up to me, and I bought. The gang began to guy me, requesting knowledge of where I had made the acquaintance of so distinguished looking a personage, and suggesting that I introduce him, etc., etc. Particularly enjoying the chaffing they were giving me, and leading it on, was Tom Molloy, then assistant foreman of the Journal pressroom, sporting good clothes and diamonds, and drawing a salary of about $50 per week. Webster turned around, saw Molloy and with a "Hello Tommy!" walked over and shook hands with him. The fellows then had the laugh on Molloy. It turned out that Jim was foreman of the composing room of New York Truth and Molloy had charge of the pressroom back in the 80's, and they had not met since. Times had gone hard with Webster, but Molloy was really glad to see him, and he was glad to the extent of a five-spot before Jim got through with him.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

Charley Clause, ex-foreman of the New York Telegraph, is a visitor in the city this week.

Mary had two little lambs
With wool as fine as silk,
One she fed the juice of clams,
The other just plain milk.

Miss Nellie Theaker, who has served on the Entertainment Committee so faithfully during the past year, would be a strong candidate for delegate this year, and if elected would give a great deal of encouragement to the Woman's Auxiliary.

Lon A. Shimp, who has been employed in this city for the past eight or ten years, having worked at all ends of a printing establishment, as foreman, solicitor, and an all-round printer, is now located in Chicago and will be with the Inland Printer Company in the near future.

Second Division.

It is said "thrice armed is he whose cause is just."

We had two additions to our force Monday. Mr. Jack Childress came to us from the "Spess."

Get Gerber to tell you about that "sewer" story. If it is not true, Mr. Morgan, we will charge it to you.

They say that the flowers that bloom in the spring, tra la, had nothing to do with the Fourth Division case.

Our genial Secretary, Mr. Garrett, seems to be so popular that no one can muster up courage enough to run against him.

There has been some talk of getting up a banquet in order to get the members of this chapel together and spend a pleasant evening socially. We think it would be a good idea.

It would seem to the casual observer that the men also have some rights which the chairman is bound to respect—the right of petition, etc. Our action was simply Se defendendo.

The poem in the I. T. U. Journal for March entitled, "Andrew Morgan, Financier," possesses considerable literary merit, and proves that we have more than one printer poet in town.

Jack Garner, an employe of this division, celebrated his forty-sixth birthday the 8th of this month. Jack is a jolly good fellow, and his many friends hope he will live to see forty-six more years.

Yes, Pard Bloomer, our "scrap" is over for the present, at least. The fabric of our organization remains in tact. Our Supreme court, the I. T. U., will have to tackle this weighty petition problem.

We have not heard, but suppose President Johnson is going to stand for re-election again. Let us hope so, at least, as he has made a good presiding officer and a first-class president, and deserves another term if he wants it.

Some of the boys seem to think from the number of soiled "linen" towels on the "hook" that the foreman of the towel department has gone on leave and forgot to put on a sub, but we suppose it is not true. Now Mr. Towel Man, it is up to you.

The election, like gentle spring, will soon be with us once again, and the candidates, some of whom have been inclined to give their "constituents" the "marble heart," will be offering them the "glad hand." Lest we forget, don't you know.

The candidates are beginning to line up for chairman. Among the aspirants besides the present incumbent, may be mentioned, Theodore Gerber, Ben Wolfe, W. H. Bright, and others. Well, the "ponies" will soon be with us again, and the boys "need the mon."

Pard Bloomer's story in the International Typographical Journal entitled "The Man Who Wouldn't Advertise" is interesting and well written, and proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that "Pard" is entitled to be classed or called one of those "D—— Literary Fellows."

No, Brother Bloomer, we were not, as you suggested, getting ready to roast anyone. It is not our habit to take undue advantage of our position, either as a correspondent of this paper or on the floor of the Union, to say or make insulting remarks about a fellow workman with whom we may differ.

It is rumored that Mr. Ben Shannon, formerly assistant foreman of this Division, who resigned about a year ago to enter the field of journalism, has set his face toward the City of Magnificent Distances, and will be on the Government pay roll again in the near future. "Uncle Sam" is a good man to work for, and you are sure of the cash.

It was real kind of our genial "Adam Bugg" friend—the poet laureate and literary genius of the Record room—to call the attention of our dear readers to the fact that the writer was using an exaggerated superfluity of pronoun we's. Really we confess we did go over the limit. "Faithful are the wounds of a friend," but the kiss of an enemy is deceitful, don't you know.

This division may be small in numbers, but we are large in more ways than one. We have two lawyers, two poets, and several diplomats. One of our poets has written the following apropos the bowling game last Thursday night:

When Nachman bowls
The thunder rolls
From balls aimed true and fine;
When hushed the din
We count the pins,
And find "all down but nine."

That was a very wise and timely suggestion made by Mr. Donath in regard to the erection of a statue to the memory of Amos J. Cummings, our deceased brother workman and staunch friend. The workingmen in general and the printers in particular never had a better or more sincere friend, and while his memory is enshrined in the heart of every true union man, nevertheless it is an excellent idea to immortalize his name in Bronze, lest future generations forget.

Pard Bloomer gives the employees of the Times and Post good advice about letting "well enough alone." The newspaper men have always had the "cream of the business"—have made better wages and worked shorter hours than any other class of printers. Nevertheless they never seem to be satisfied. The men employed next to the Star work 9 hours per day and make on an average of from $14 to $18 per week the year around, and there are no better workmen in the country, but we very seldom, if ever, hear any complaint from them.

As a further testimony of the high esteem in which the late chief clerk, Mr. W. H. Collins, was held by all who knew him in the office here, his many friends in the Proof Room and compositors of the First and Second divisions, night force, have presented his bereaved widow with a beautiful and handsomely bound copy of the many resolutions passed by the different chapels in the office at the time of Mr. Collins' death. On the front page is a life-like pen-portrait of Mr. Collins. The penmanship, which is absolutely perfect, is the work of the well-known artist, Mr. J. W. Swank.

The truth of the old adage that "He that laughs last, laughs best" was never more forcibly brought to the attention of some people, whose names modesty prevents us from mentioning here, than last Thursday night, the 19th instant, when the Second Division bowling team, No. 1 defeated the First Division team, No. 1, three straight games. Both teams put up a very good game, indeed for amateurs, but the Second was in exceptionally good form and bowled like professionals. Let us hope they'll keep up the good work. Let them remember that our good name is at stake, so to speak, as we have boasted, that we had the finest and best team in the bunch.

Third Division.

W. A. Morris has been transferred to the Job Room.

Mr. White, of Vermont, is a recent addition to this division.

And already there is a candidate for the office of chairman; but it is most too early to publish names.

The boys are agreed that one day on "The North American Farmer" is worse than ten nights in a barroom.

Since the departure of the night men that "Hood's Sarsaparilla look" has vanished from our faces and we do not so often feel "out of sorts."

Speaking about "fans," the only fans worth mentioning in this Division are those run by electricity and they need oiling. Ditto baseballs fans.

J. H. Heslet now performs the duties of assistant foreman, and E. S. Moores, recently transferred from the Treasury Branch, succeeds Mr. Heslet as postmaster.

A mooted question—"Who in h— opened that window?"

A leading question on Saturday before pay-day—"Who has a quarter to give out?"

The recent fine weather has even caused some of the hot-house plants to jeopardize their health (?) by occasionally opening a window. How some mortals do tempt the Gods!

An item in the Fifth Division news recently reminds me of a similar occurrance on this reservation recently. Our mutual friend Cady came on one morning with his shirt on "hind-side-before," and whenever called out on rush copy was obliged to walk backward. No cigars, hence this item.

No baseball enthusiasm in this chapel at present. A call was made for all the cranks to meet at 12.20 p. m. last Wednesday to make arrangements for the organization of a Third Division baseball team. The fans were conspicuous by their absence, which dampened the ardor of the promoters, who went way back and sat down.

Two able-bodied laborers distinguished themselves one day last week by washing the windows, but the transoms still retain their stained-glass appearance, having lost neither prestige nor fly-specks. When interrogated as to why partiality was shown, the intelligent employees replied that they were simply instructed to wash the windows.

George Carney, one of our sporty boys, has been exiled to Siberia, which being interpreted means transferred to the Spess. George has been sawing wood there for about three weeks, and already looks 10 years older, but says he likes it, and is making good. We miss both his genial presence and horsey conversation. When it comes to "talking horse," Carney can give old David Harum cards and spades.

The above items are written with one object in view, namely, to let the craft know that there is in existence such a chapel as the Third Division of the Government Printing Office. It is no easy matter for one to scare up readable items in a division where he doesn't know six men besides himself, and perchance scarcely recognizes himself even when looking in a "glass." But doubtless "we shall know each other better when the mists (of March) have cleared away" and we are settled in the new office. Now let some old-timer, who has all kinds of "grey matter" to give out, get a move on and represent the Third Division, as it can not be represented by

Bindery Notes.

"Pop" Burns has a cat up in Philadelphia who can say "Grandma." The slowness of Philadelphia is proverbial, but this cat is all right.

The boycotted member of the casing-in division, who patronizes scab barbers, was down to the Empire Theater one night last week looking for a reserved seat in the "coon" gallery for 15 cents.

Johnny Burns likes his meat well done. He had occasion recently to cook a chop, and he gave it a full two hours' cooking. When he started to eat the chop it was impossible to distinguish it from a large Saratoga chip.

Tim McKenna has had great trouble with the dog Patsy Finnegan brought him from Boston. He was out walking with him the other day and the animal ran away. Tim raced after him for a dozen squares only to find on his return home that the dog preceded him.

A smoker in honor of Mr. Samuel Mayberry, of the Union Building Bindery, was held at Bessler's Hotel last Saturday evening, Charles Welch presiding. Mr. Mayberry resigned to return to Philadelphia, and some of his associates joined together to give him a good send off. A very good repast was served by mine host, and the festivities continued until midnight. There were songs by Fred. Seufferth, J. J. Gorman, Tim Murphy, Jack Hanlon, and Ed. Haley. Short speeches of "God speed" to Mr. Mayberry were made by Messrs. William C. Connor, F. F. Bogia, and William H. Kelly. Mr. Charles McEneaney presided at the piano, and was assisted by Messrs. Weidman and Ben. Spellbring in furnishing the instrumental music. Recitations by Charles Weston, Bill Reese, and John McCausland were also features of the programme.

NOTES OF THE SMOKER.

George Reynolds never lost a glass.

Mr. Bogia's address was a very "grave" one.

Chairman Robert Stack was a very busy man—Bobby on the spot.

Drs. Perry and Binkert were the most dignified gentlemen in the room.

"Alec" Morrison greatly disturbed his neighbors by his loud and boisterous (?) talking.

Benker's enthusiasm as a water wagonite was shown in his attempt to steal Pat Finnegan's soda water.

John McCausland's recitation from "Damon and Pythias" met with the "warm" approval of all present.

Johnny Burns sat next to George Barnes during the evening. John knew where the supplies would be greatest.

Bill Haslett's moving propensities were sharply drawn to the attention of the gathering by Kelly's few remarks. Bill took it all good naturedly, however.

It was noticed that Jack Atkins was not familiar with the water wagon, as his attempts to pour out his Weiss beer were anything but successful. Cassidy's efforts were equally painful.

Bill Reese, whose talking machine was out of order at the banquet, claims he has not been right since he indulged in the luxury of a Turkish bath. Bill attempted to recite five different times, but his memory faded away.

One of the greatest problems that J. L. Feeney has to solve in the Bindery sewing room is how to ventilate the room so it will please all the employees in that department. In the piece sewing room the women work very fast and hard, and as a result soon become quite warm. About one-half want the windows open and the other half do not. In the machine section the same conditions prevail, and it is no wonder Feeney's hair is turning white. The following lines have been sent to your correspondent regarding the conditions in the Bindery sewing room:

A DILEMMA.

Did you every read how Dante took a stroll through hell one night?
Have you heard his little story of that interesting sight?
How with cold some were freezing, some melting in the flame?
Well, in the Bindery sewing room the conditions are the same.

When the windows are all down and the fresh air rushes in
There arises such a tumult, such a fearful noise and din.
Half the women don their cloaks and declare that will freeze;
They complain that they will catch a cold and commence to loudly sneeze.

With the windows up there arises from the other half the cry,
"We are stifling; we are smothering; give us air or we must die."
And so it goes from morn 'till night; they are difficult to please,
For the temperature that would melt one girl will make another freeze.

There are hot-air girls and cold-air girls, and each present their plea,
And, like the famed Kilkenny cats, it seems they can't agree.
If one should put the window up another puts it down,
And then they scold and grumble and at each other frown.

For the hot-air girls are happy with the windows tightly closed,
And when the cold air enters they look as if they're frozed.
And the cold-air girls pant and fume; their clothes are wringing wet—
With perspiration; they cry for air and all day long they fret.

"That window gives me pain in back," you'll hear most every day;
"This atmosphere is full of germs," another one will say.
And so it is all day long they continually complain,
And to try and satisfy them all would drive
a man insane.

TROUBLE AT ATLANTA.

Secretary Garrett Asked to Assist Atlanta Union.

C. C. Houston, organizer for the district comprising Georgia, has notified the officers of Columbia Typographical Union that trouble has developed in the book and job offices of that city. It appears that the Piedmont Printing Company, which is conducted by R. W. Darby, of this city, is involved in the trouble with the other offices of that city. Atlanta has had a hard struggle for the past five years in endeavoring to regain the book and job offices of that city. The present trouble started in the office of Foote & Davis, where the entire force went out last week. It developed that that firm was "farming" out their work, and Atlanta Union immediately took action by notifying the Union offices that its members would not be permitted to handle any work from Foote & Davis. The Piedmont Printing Company refused to abide by the action of the Union and accordingly a "walk out" was had in that office, and to the credit of the recently elected members of that Union from this city, nine in number, all came out with the rest of the force. Organizer Houston reports the matter well in hand and an early settlement of the trouble is expected.

NOTES.

Clark was not up to his usual high standard, as is the case with all good bowlers at times.

Parshall showed lack of practice. He has a good ball, but doesn't devote enough time to the game.

Bielaski rolled a savage ball, and made it count for three good consistent games. He tied Richards as to total number of pins—511.

Richards bowled a beautiful game in the third, closing the play for his side with five consecutive strikes and scoring the highest in the game—216.

Smiths bewildering curve was erratic and seemed bent on assuming the "English" too soon, landing to the left of the center pin frequently.

Sherman worked hard, and was rewarded by a fair average. He gained third place in the total number of pins, considering that Richards and Bielaski tied for first.

McAloon threw consternation into the opposing team at the very start by gracefully knocking the pins over all in a bunch four consecutive times. He stood second in total pins.

Mr. King, of the First Division, who wrote up the game last week, certainly gave a fair and impartial account, and he deserves the sincere thanks of all. Lack of space forbids us going into all the details.

Harward, Heisler, and Nachman put up a rather poor game. With the exception of Heisler's last, when he reached 175. Nachman's countenance during the progress of the game made it unnecessary to consult the score board for information concerning the losers.

The score now stands four games for the Second's First Team against two for the First's in the series of nine games agreed upon to determine the championship. It will be readily seen that the boys in the Second have the upper hand, as it will require but one game out of the final three for them to win, while it will require three straights on the part of the First.

Manila Mention.

Through the courtesy of Mr. M. E. Rouzee, we received a copy of the Christmas number of the Manila Times, the pioneer English-American paper of the Philippines. It is a 28-page paper, with a 4-page illuminated cover in colors. This publication shows the manifest progress in our new possessions in the past four years. The articles are well written and half tone engravings appear in profusion. One of the articles is on the Government Printing Bureau and speaks well of the establishment, giving due credit to John S. Leech, the chief of that Bureau. In an article on its Christmas number, the Times says:

Through the courtesy of the Bureau of Printing, it has been possible for the Manila Times to put before its readers this superbly illustrated number. The pictures in this impression were all made by, or under the direction of the Public Printer, Mr John S. Leech, and they speak for themselves, as better half-tones could not have been made anywhere.

It might be well to speak of the Printing Bureau more extendedly, as few of Manila's people have any idea of the vast amount of first-class work this department is doing. And yet, if we stop to think of the many tons of printing it requires to run this Insular Government each month, we can not but help form some idea of the magnitude of the job the Government Printer wrestles with. Every scrap of completed work turned out by this Bureau attests its fitness and thoroughness, and when it is said that its work is inferior to none, not even the best that is produced in the United States, the highest possible compliment is paid. Chief Leech and his corps of able assistants, are deserving of compliments. They thoroughly understand the work they were sent out her to do, and thus far they have been doing it to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

They have the gratitude of the Times for the excellent illustrating done on this number.

In this connection, we desire to say that another Washingtonian, Chas F. Lanman, has charge of the photo engraving department of the Bureau of Printing, and comes in for his share of commendation for results attained in the work done on the Christmas number of the Manila Times.

John Henry Boner.

The following tribute to John Henry Boner, recently deceased, from the pen of Cicero W. Harris, of this city, is taken from the News and Observer, of Raleigh, N. C.:

Death is not a ruthless conqueror when he comes as he came to John Henry Boner. Mr. Boner, with a gentle Christian resignation had welcomed him. As I looked on the pallid face of my friend—North Carolina's most representative poet—he seemed only in a peaceful slumber, presently to arouse to the stern duties of mortal life. He had not aged—he was always wan in face, for the animation that lighted his eye and inspired his countenance. God has taken him from wife and friends had clothed his immortal spirit with a nobler radiance—that was all.

John Henry Boner, of Salem, was a type of the Moravian community, in the midst of which he was reared and grew to man's estate. He was sturdy in his nature, calm in mood, intelligent without extravagant sentimentalism, especially religious, devout in some phases of his personal and poetical being, and if not what is stamped by the approval of a rigid criticism a genius of a high order, he had nevertheless the finest qualities of manhood united with undoubtedly splendid talents. It has always been my belief that had he enjoyed in youth the benefits of a university education, had he then not been compelled to struggle for bread in an uncongenial occupation, but had had the advantages of travel and culture, he would have risen to a much higher work in American letters. As it was he attained distinction, and before he had passed middle life had been known both at home and abroad as a true singer and a man of fine promise.

A Leipsic publisher, some twenty odd years since, included in a single volume of authology of English and American writers, containing not over two or three hundred selections, three or four of Mr. Boner's poems. This was an honor which he duly appreciated. It was in his early Washington life, before he had lived in the charmed literary circle of the great metropolis.

The largest collection of his poetry was the volume entitled "The Whsipering Pines," issued by Brentano. It contained the best of his boyish verse, some of it remodeled, and very much of his later poetry.

I remember having been touched with some lines which, as they first appeared in the North Carolina papers, bore the caption, "Under the Snow." These words, the refrain of the piece adequately described the writer's pathetic feeling at the time of composition. In the same volume there were a number of Southern nature-pieces, which show his poetical and sectional affinity with Timrod and Hayne and Sevier. So far as North Carolina poets are concerned, I would compare him with his friend, T. H. Hill, and my friend, Edwin W. Fuller.

None of Mr. Boner's longer pieces is, perhaps, so ornate a piece of work as Fuller's "Angle in the Cloud," but certainly not one of that admirable poet's shorter poems reach the full excellence of several of Boner's best short pieces. I was always delighted with that trick of the Salem poet which led him to use in the most natural manner obscure little words for rhyming.

I have not the special gift and this is not the time for a close examination into the merits of Mr. Boner's poetical labors. At some other time some one more competent will write con amore on the subject.

Mr. Stockard's recent appreciation was in the right direction. I wish to call attention to some features of Mr. Boner's poetry on this sad occasion of lamenting his death. Besides a descriptive poesy of high capacity he had a lyrical ring when at his best, which proved his kinship with the Southern singers named above, and others, such as Randall, Requier, Ticknor and Father Ryan. He also wrote a few very creditable verses in dialect—negro dialect, I mean. But in my opinion his sentimental short poems and his description of the whispering pines, will live longest of all his effusions. In later years, like that gifted Maryland-Georgian, James R. Randall, he wrote but little.

Excellent as his poetry and as solid as his labors on the Century and Standard Dictionaries, the Sunday World literary supplement, and the Literary Digest, it is to the noble, steady tenor of his pure and gentle and refined Christian life that his closest friends and admirers choose to dwell at this hour of their bereavement. God loved him and He took him away into the land of eternal effulgence and bliss supernal. Let the blameless life of the poet long be an example to the people of North Carolina and the South—the land he loved so well and whose beauties and glories he cherished with almost inimitable grace.

The Atlanta Trouble.

The Piedmont Printing Company, of Atlanta, Ga., which is an annex of the R. W Darby Printing Company, of this city, having refused to agree to the request of Atlanta Typographical Union that its members be relieved from assisting in executing sub-contracts for Foote & Davies, a firm that has been having trouble with Atlanta Union, allowed its force of compositors to walk out last week. The force consisted of the following, nearly all recently from this city: Richard L. Meredith, William Riddleberger, Fred L. Konow, Charles A. Lucas, Guy Zimmerman, George H. Earle, Joseph P. Hanson, H. C. Hagan, Edwin Ehrbar, R. M. Heinbaugh, W. H. Gilliland, W. P. Meriwether, R. A. Goodman, Cooper McCalley, and C. J. Farrar.

The Atlanta News, of March 26, says:

An effort is being made to break the printers' strike in the shop of the Foote & Davies Company and the Piedmont Printing Company by replacing the striking printers with non-union men.

Three strike breakers, one from Birmingham and two from Pittsburg, were sent to Atlanta today under the auspices of the United Typothetae of America, and are at work at the Foote & Davies shop. The workmen command fabulous wages and can not be induced to become union men. Other printers who have come to Atlanta have been sent away by the Atlanta Typographical Union.

An effort will be made by the Atlanta Typographical Union to send the three strike breakers from Atlanta.

Later—The strike in the book and job offices has now been extended to all the offices in the city, over 140 members of Atlanta Union being involved.

Bindery Notes.

John Macaroni Burns was laid up several days last week. Cause, overloading stomach with corn beef and cabbage.

George Barnes is very nervous, and is living in hope that the railroad company will buy his real estate in Jackson Alley.

Tommy Kelly, of the blank room, is longing for fine weather. He enjoys looking at the boys playing the wheel at Cabin John's Bridge. Tommy walked home several times last summer.

Sam Koockogey had a narrow escape last week while riding on the elevator. He stepped a little too far back and had the heel of his shoe torn off. Sam feels badly over the loss of his shoe.

Gustave Wiegand, known as the "Count," is making arrangements for his summer tour. Several orders will be sent to the leading tailors, and his secretary is planning the itinerary of his trip.

Very busy at Benning.

Now you will hear the wise guys tell you how to bet your money (not his).

Now you will meet the man who receives special information, knows all about the race horses, and generally broke.

To help Feeney out of his dilemma, Cow Boy recommends that he arrange in the sewing room two divisions, one the hot-air and the other the cold-air division, and then everybody will be happy.

Jack Walsh, of the Folding Room, has received notice to appear at the golf links for a try out. Jack's knee pants and Scotch stockings are a dream, and with his little red cap he looks like a bird. Joe Meehan, of the same room, will act as caddy.

I am not a tout or tipster. Will give you three sure winners for the season. Play them when you can and you will keep out of the high brush:

First. Washington Loan and Trust.
Second. Union Savings.
Third. Building Association.

The committees of ladies in the Folding Room and Bindery, having charge of the pound party for the benefit of the Bell Home for poor children, report that the total collection amounted to over 1,200 pounds of food products of all sort. At each door of the G. P. O. two ladies were stationed, and several baskets were filled and a great deal of money collected. With the money collected 550 pounds of groceries were bought from T. A. Rover. The Bell Home is under the management of the King's Daughters. It is located in Anacostia, and in the summer all the children spend the hot weather at Colonial Beach. The committee desire to extend their thanks to the employees of the G. P. O. who so generously contributed toward such a worthy charity. The following committee had charge of the collection: Kate V. Smoot, Bettie Speisser, Ida Tiverney, Ida Dodge, Nannie T. Daniel, Julia Pollock, and Emilia Peckham. The following letter explains itself:

THE RECTORY.

MY DEAR MRS. SMOOT: We wish to extend to you (and all of the ladies who have so generously helped you) for the large donation so kindly sent to the Bell Home.

I only wish each one who contributed could have been present when the boxes were opened.

The children's faces could not have expressed more pleasure than the grown people, for our hearts were all filled with gratitude.

I hope every one will visit the Home in the spring and see the children they have helped us to care for. We have nineteen from fifteen years down to four. Five of them are about four or five years old, so you may know how grateful we are for every gift.

With very much love and gratitude in our hearts, and feeling sure God will bless every one who helps to feed His lambs, I am,

Affectionately, yours,

MARY E. DAVENPORT.

COW BOY.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

The Woman's Auxiliary of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, held its last meeting before closing the charter list on last Saturday, March 28, at Typographical Temple. Considerable interest is being taken in the Auxiliary, there being present, besides the sixty-four charter members, quite a number of the members of Columbia Union, most of whom were called upon for remarks on the label and the benefits to organized labor in general by having the wives and daughters of union men banded together to further the use of the label. The remarks of some of the lady members proved conclusively that they are very much in earnest in this work, and ere long Washington will have, no doubt, one of the largest auxiliaries working under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union.

The Auxiliary starts off with sixty-four charter members, and indications point that by the time the convention meets here in August several hundred will have enrolled their names.

President Gordon called the meeting to order, and, after congratulating those present for the interest taken in the movement, called upon the following well-known members of Columbia Union for a few remarks: Messrs. Whitehead, Merritt, E. H. Thomas, F. C. Roberts, Templar, Ellis, Stretton, Bynum, and Bowen. Mrs. T. A. Bynum and Mrs. Joe M. Johnson also made addresses. After the speaking the following took part in the entertainment: Piano solo, Miss Myrtle Jacoby; descriptive solo, Mr. Byron Bond, accompanied by Mrs. J. E. Bond; duet, Miss Jacoby and Miss Mary Diffenbaugh; Mr. J. E. Bond, comic song, "Hard Luck;" recitation, Mr. Frank Stretton, after which refreshments were served and dancing indulged in.

The following letter was received, and, after its reading, the writer was unanimously elected to membership in the Auxiliary:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 24, 1903.

MRS. CLARA L. BENNETT,
1010 Ninth street northeast:

MY DEAR MRS. BENNETT: My husband has expressed to me his desire that I would present my name for membership in the Ladies' Auxiliary, and as I have always felt a warm interest in the cause to which he has all his life been devoted, I told him I would make application, if it were not expected that I should serve on committees or attend the meetings. (He has explained to you, I think, why I would be unable to discharge the duties of an active, or, I might say, a useful member.) If you believe my accession to your membership, with such understanding, would be welcome, will you kindly present this as my application, and oblige,

Yours, very cordially,

MRS. AUGUST DONATH,
1328 Eighth street northwest.

The next meeting of the Auxiliary will be held at Typographical Temple on the evening of April 25, at 8 o'clock, at which time an invitation will be extended to the various candidates for office at the coming election in Columbia Union to be present and address the meeting on the lines of the label, its use and benefits, and the good the Auxiliary can do in the labor field, after which dancing will be indulged in. The initiation fee has been reduced to 50 cents.

Trouble Among the Tailors.

Local No. 188, Journeymen Tailors of America, in this city, are endeavoring to secure recognition from the merchant tailors of this city. The agreement to employ none but members of the local union has been signed by the following custom tailors: George W. Herold, 702 Ninth street northwest; Thomas E. Gilbert, 818 F street northwest; Bobys & Bobys, 710 Ninth street northwest; Geraci & Farrell, 1135 G street northwest; George W. Mobray, Harry J. Lee, 517 Fourteenth street northwest; John G. Haas, 1308 F street northwest; Norris & Johanson, 1336 F street northwest; Edwin Potbury, 524 Thirteenth street northwest, and Eisemann Bros., 443-445 Seventh street northwest.

The representatives of the union claim that no attempt to enforce an increase in the scale of wages is being made. It is a struggle for recognition of the union. The most stubborn resistence comes from employing tailors identified closely with the Merchant Tailors' Exchange. The present fight was precipitated about two weeks ago when E. H. Snyder & Co., 1111 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, discharged five men for pernicious activity in union affairs. The employing tailors are signing contract daily, and it is confidently hoped that the men now out will be back at their benches in the coming week.

THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 1903.

The man who whispers down a well
About the goods he has to sell
Won't reap as many golden dollars
As he who climbs a tree and hollers.
—JOHN A. ONYUN.

WE clip the following from the New York Unionist, under the "Chat of the Craft" department of that interesting publication:

"During the month of February," says the Washington TRADES UNIONIST, "the average cost per month per resident amounted to eight and a half cents. Number of residents during the month, 114. In the same period there were five admissions and one death." Perhaps we don't understand the figure given by our contemporary as the cost per month of each resident of the Home, but we surmise if the figure is correct Mr. DEACON is a master in financial management.

What was intended for "meal" was made to read month. The article was on a report of Superintendent DEACON, of the Union Printers' Home, for the month of February. We have the satisfaction of knowing, however, that our exchanges consider THE TRADES UNIONIST of enough importance to "read" it.

Commissioner of Labor.

The candidacy of WM. S. WAUDBY, for the position of Commissioner of Labor, is being advocated by a number of labor papers throughout the country. In this connection, the Rochester Evening Times, where Mr. WAUDBY is at present, has, through its labor columns, the following sketch of Mr. WAUDBY'S connection with the labor movement:

Mr. WILLIAM S WAUDBY, one of the special agents of the United States Department of Labor, is being favorably advocated by organized labor as the successor of Commissioner WRIGHT, upon the acceptance of that official's resignation, which was placed in the hands of President ROOSEVELT last fall, Commissioner WRIGHT having accepted the presidency of Clark College, Worcester, Mass. The promotion of Mr. WAUDBY to the commissionership would by a well-merited recognition of his abilities for the position, as well as an act of justice to the labor organizations which created this department of the Government.

Mr. WAUDBY has been one of the special agents since May 18, 1885, having been appointed by Commissioner WRIGHT when the Bureau was organized under the Interior Department. He was subsequently assigned to Great Britain and Ireland to secure statistics relative to the cost of production of the leading articles in the manufacturing industries as well as the prevailing rates of wages.

In 1889 he was the representative for the International Typographical Union of North America at the Paris Labor Congress, being a member of "Big Six," of New York. Consequently, he is well known in labor circles aside from the fact that he is a frequent and proficient writer upon subjects connected with the labor problems of the day. His article upon the "Children of Labor" in the April issue of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly is a masterly one. His duties have taken him to nearly every city and town in the United States, and his powers of observation and judgment of human nature have fitted him pre-eminently for the position of Commissioner of Labor, should these qualifications be taken into consideration when the new commissioner is appointed.

Mr. WAUDBY spent is boyhood days in Ohio, and at the age of 13 was apprenticed to the printing trade in the city of Columbus, joining Typographical Union, No. 5, when he became a journeyman, and holding various executive offices in that organization. He afterwards worked on the New York Herald.

Mr. WAUDBY is an expert in the matter of labor statistics and is so recognized throughout the country.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

The Progressive Printer, a St. Louis (Mo.) monthly, devoted to the interests of employing printers, in its January number quoted the portion of President Roosevelt's annual message to Congress in relation to public printing, and says:

We have heretofore adverted to this same point and claimed that there was an "excessive cost" attached to all the Government Printing Office output—probably from 40 to 50 per cent more than any good private printing plant would charge for it, and make a better profit on it at that than is now realized by the best of them on competitive printing. Really, there is no good reason why the Government should do its own printing (except for the convenience) than that it should make its own clothing and grow its own provisions for the Army and Navy.

The great underlying reason for all such assaults on the Goverment Printing Office is that no employing printer is permitted to make a profit for himself out of the work of others in doing the Government's printing. That a private employer could do such portion of the Government work as he might be able to contract for cheaper (for himself) than the Government does is quite probable; but that he would do it for the Government for less than the Government now pays I do not believe for a moment. His profit would be the difference between the wages he would pay and what the Government now pays. I should like to ask one of these would be contractors if he would be willing to undertake to do the work for 40 per cent less than it is now being done, paying the same wages and granting the privileges of vacation and holidays which the Government accords to practically all its employees. If wages were reduced to the scale of the hardest screw of an employer, all holidays and vacations refused or deducted, and every man and woman "laid off" every day he and she could be spared, as is the practice of most contractors, undoubtedly the cost of printing could be reduced sufficiently to enable a contractor to make a profit.

I have never yet heard the charge made that the cost of individual jobs or works done in the Government Printing Office is greater than would be the case if done by a private employer, but that the whole—the great sum of $5,000,000—is an enormous amount for printing; and this, of course, without considering for a moment the vast volume of that printing.

But there are other reasons why the Government should do its own printing outside of the question of economy. In many instances a book must be issued within a few hours of the time the copy is furnished, as in the case of the Maine investigation of four or five years ago. In that instance the copy was furnished one afternoon, and the next morning the bound volume, text, illustrations, and all, was laid on the desk of every Senator and Representative—a feat which no private employer in the world could contemplate. During its various manipulations probably 2,000 people were employed on it—type set (about 700 pages, as I now recollect); proofs read, corrected, revised; illustrations made; type made up, sent to press; sheets folded, stitched, and bound. What figure did the element of cost cut in the production of that book? None whatever. It was wanted the next morning; and it was there. So it is, on a smaller scale generally, with much of the work of the Government.

There is but one thing in any argument against the Government Printing Office—no private employer is permitted to pocket the profits that he could squeeze out of the insufficient wages he would pay his employees. If there is one grain of truth in the charge of greater cost of the public printing as now done than by contract, the consolation is in the fact that the profit goes to 4,000 employees instead of possibly four contractors. And that is what hurts the cavilers!

As to the suggestion that the Government might as well make the clothing and grow the provisions for the Army and Navy as to do its own printing, it is barely possible that shoddy-clothing and provision scandals of past years might have been avoided if it had done so; for I have never yet heard the quality of the product of the Government Printing Office questioned.

In an article in the Times one day last week Col. Charles H. Slack—our own Colonel Slack—was mentioned as the probable managing editor of a new Republican daily to be launched at Roanoke or Lynchburg, Va. The Colonel would be just the man for the place—tall, commanding, and distinguished looking, with a flow of ideas for which his superb knowledge of the English language enables him to find fitting expression, a new epoch in Southern journalism would be dated from the Colonel's entry therein. Who does not remember the Colonel's Fourth-of-July speech of three or four years ago? I expect to see it in the school readers of the next generation, as the speeches of Patrick Henry, John Adams, and Daniel Webster were in those of my school days. The Colonel modestly says that he gained his military title by marriage. I am sure he has still other and greater claims to it. He looks, talks, and bears himself like a Colonel, and what greater claims than those can any man have? I don't know when I've had a newspaper paragraph so cheer me up and fill me with such complete satisfaction as the one above noted.

The promotion of William S. Waudby to be Commissioner of Labor, if it shall be brought about by the active cooperation and demand of the labor forces, will be strictly in keeping with civil service principles, of which the President is a well-known advocate. Mr. Waudby has been a special agent of the Bureau of Labor for about eighteen years and is thoroughly familiar with the problems presented. We, as workingmen, want a Commissioner of Labor who will be to his peculiar field what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is to the Indians, what the Commissioner of Pensions is to the pensioners, what the Commissioner of Patents is to the inventors, what the Commissioner of the General Land Office is to matters pertaining to public lands, what the Commissioner of Education is to education—a man interested in the particular work covered by his sphere of action and with some measure of control as future legislation shall give him power. A mere statistician is as useless to labor—and the creation of the Labor Bureau originally was undoubtedly a concession to labor—as is an astronomer in the precession of the equinoxes, a recorder of what is happening, without influencing results. Statistics furnish bases of action sometimes, when it is well known that they were compiled without fear or favor and regardless of whose bull they would gore, but that is the extent of their usefulness. We ought to have a Commissioner of Labor who is devoted, heart and soul and mind, to the interests of labor, and Mr. Waudby has the ability, the experience, and the honesty to fill the office capably and acceptably to the only interests which should be consulted as to this particular appointment—the wage-earners of the country.

Frank Stretton's cards as a candidate for delegate were put in circulation the other day and now he is a full-fledged aspirant. As a thorough-going "man of the world," he will make an excellent representative, for his experience has been wide and varied. He has done some traveling as a printer, and I believe at one time as an actor. I have heard him recite "Rienzi's Address to the Romans" with such feeling as to draw tears from a beer spigot, with such fervor as to inspire enthusiasm in an oyster, and with such impetuosity as to even arouse courage in those fellows who do malicious things anonymously. He had thought of running last year, but kindly got out of the way of Tom Bynum or somebody, an act for which he deserves all credit. So far as I know, he is the only candidate the proof room will present, and is by far the most available man in that field who has not been already so honored.

A little circular which I received a few days ago from President Charles T. Hendler, of the Government Printing Office Council, National Union, indicates that this practice you've been indulging in of leaving the payment of your assessment to the 15th, 18th, or 20th of the month, instead of on or before the 10th, and trusting to Charlie Leeds's good nature to carry you, won't go in the future. After this, pay up on time or stand suspended and fined. I think it's a very good move. Though Leeds has been most obliging with the members, the tardy payments must be a nuisance.

I received a letter from Sam Phillips, of New York, the other day, in which he gave me some news items. Sam Yost, formerly of Staunton, Va., a brother of ex-Congressman Yost, is dying of consumption at the Seton Hospital, Home for Incurables, New York. Joe Young, one of New York's delegates to Cincinnati last year, bankman on the Press, expects to be with us at the convention. Sam had recently called on Cornelius Conaty, a long time ago a compositor in the G. P. O., now day foreman on the Troy Press, and had found him fatter than himself, but beginning to show age. Billy Grimes, once a Record compositor, now on the New York Tribune, is thinking of running for delegate this year. Walter Chase has had another trip to Europe—I don't know how long ago. Jim Murphy is reading on the Journal. Sam is still reading on the Press. His wife has been having a siege of the grippe. He wanted to be remembered to old friends.

* * * *

The word comes to me that Joseph G. Stelle, of the Job Room, is a candidate for delegate, and I sincerely hope it is true, for he has done the union much useful service and deserves well at its hands. As chairman of the Relief Committee he has been untiring in looking after the unfortunate, and in every work which he has been called upon to do he has been faithful as well as efficient. Having "perpetrated" Joe on the printing business, as the late Hi Hand used to express it—and of no act of my life am I prouder—I feel a deep personal interest in him and now in his election, and I am sure that service such as his will not go unrewarded.

* * * *

In my recollections last week of Col. A. W. Edwards, the new consul to Montreal, Canada, I forgot one little story about him. In the Commonwealth office was a little, old, dried-up fellow named Charlie Tinker, noted for his dry, sententious way of saying things. Major Edwards weighed in the neighborhood of 300 pounds, and as Tinker surveyed the Major's manly proportions with admiring gaze one day he remarked:

"Gosh! If I owned that fellow and a side-hill farm, I'd take him to the high side of it and bust him!"

* * * *

Though nothing official on the subject has come to my notice, I hear that Harry O'Donnell will be a candidate for delegate again this year, and with the gallant run he made last year he ought to go through in a canter. In the last campaign he had us all a-guessing. As a committeeman he has done much service for the union, and that ought always to be a potent factor. It is about the only hope of reward that our hard-worked committeemen have. With O'Donnell, Stelle, Stretton, and Bates as sure candidates; Nelgner only waiting for some one to grab him bodily and throw him onto the track by main force, and Tom Fitzwilliam coquetting with himself whether he will or not, we will have something of a field, and there will be quite a number of other entries before April 19, the day for making nominations. Come out, boys; $60 and no dirty railroad journey.

* * * *

Colonel Monroe, in the Sunday Post, is worth reading, as my friend suggested in THE TRADES UNIONIST last week, and he has a sense of justice that leads him to feel a proper respect for trades unions, unlike some other writers, who toady to a capitalism that has no regard for such as they except so far as they are useful to them. He is a dirty-minded wage earner, whether he works with pen or pick, who does not feel a community of interest with all other wage-earners.

* * * *

Later than what I have written on the subject elsewhere in this issue, I hear that David J. Roberts, of the First Division, has decided to be a candidate for delegate. He will make a very creditable representative, and has had an extensive experience as a "tourist," which always broadens a man. Often Dave has recognized as old acquaintances the heroes of my "reminiscences"—men he had known in the some time back in one town or another—and I have wondered at times that he and I never ran across each other till we both landed in this haven of rest, as we were "on the road" about the same time. He has hosts of friends who will make his calling and election sure.

Recent advices from Golden, Colo., are to the effect that T. E. ("Snapper") Garrison is nicely located in that city, with his family. He is associated with his brother in the publication of the Golden Globe, a very creditable sheet, judging from the copy before me.

The races at Bennings are popular.

W. C. Watson is in Little Rock, Ark.

J. L. ("Cos.") Rodier, of the Times, is a down-town candidate for delegate.

J. W. Leeper, Morris Longfellow, and Dan McDowell, all of Baltimore, were in town last Saturday.

Charles C. Thompson, of the Post, would make an excellent Trustee, and the down-town membership is entitled to one member of the board.

W. G. Rabold, one of the operators on the Post for several years past, has gone to Cleveland, Ohio, to locate. He will take a "mill" on the World of that city.

Albert E. Hill, President of Nashville (Tenn.) Typographical Union, No. 20, was a visitor in the city during the past week. He has just returned from an extended trip to Europe. He was recently elected a delegate from the Tennessee State Federation of Labor to the American Federation of Labor.

Warren C. Browne, late of the American Workman, New York City, is again in the harness, this time at Buffalo, N. Y., where he has editorial charge of Progress, which, as its name implies, is a paper for the people. Mr. Browne is well known to the printing fraternity as a writer of strong conviction, forceful and fearless. He has our best wishes in his new field.

Jacob C. Lesher has been making up during the past week.

H. Van De Bogert and E. D. King have returned from their leave.

William S. Taylor is the champion horseshoe thrower of Bates street.

Among the possible candidates for delegate the name of J. H. Babcock has been mentioned.

There was a hot race for secretary of this chapel last Tuesday, Mr. Lillard receiving 74 votes and Mr. Etchberger 2.

Harry O'Donnell, of the Agriculture Branch, was around during the past week announcing his candidacy for delegate.

Tony Garner wishes it to be known that owing to increased military duties he will not be able to make the race for delegate this year.

The election for chairmen and secretary took place last Tuesday and resulted as follows: For chairmen, Mabrey, 119; Nesbitt, 20; Love, 1; Miller, 1. For secretary, Lillard, 74; Etchberger, 2; Darden, 7.

It is rumored in the Second Division that Simpson has written a romance of the G. P. O. It is understood that it will be published in weekly installments. The title to the story is "The Custodian of the Sugar Bowl; or O. K. G.'s Revenge."

In the race for chairman there was practically only one candidate, as Mr. Nesbitt was nominated without his presence or consent, and desired to withdraw, but it was ruled that his name would have to be voted on. In justice to Mr. Nesbitt it might be stated that he made a general request that his name be eliminated from the voting.

SANS NOM.

Second Division.

Spring fever seems to be epidemic here.

Good morning; will you have a "smoke?"

The atmosphere seems to be quite "horsey" about here.

J. M. A. Spottswood has returned to his desk, somewhat improved, after an absence, on account of sickness, of about four weeks.

Our quarterly chapel meeting was held Tuesday, the 31st interest. The present incumbent was reelected. Taking everything into consideration, Mr. Gerber, Goodkey's opponent, made a very good run. He (Gerber) was not indorsed by the "machine," but ran on an independent ticket. Although our "Dick Croker" was not at the caucus meeting, he had the course all mapped out, and his lieutenants were hustling all the morning and his instructions were carried out according to Hoyle. We suppose the same "reform" policy will be pursued as heretofore and we will continue to have a very fine time. But, cheer up, boys; it may not be true. The following is the result of the vote:

The election Wednesday resulted in the election of David Snyder for chairman. The vote was as follows: Snyder, 40; Doxey, 30; Williams, 22. F. A. Tuck was the unanimous choice of the chapel for secretary.

The North American "Farmer" is a good term when properly used, as for instance, in referring to the writer or some of the other "Rubes" in this "section;" but I endeavored to write "Fauna," not "Farmer."

A petition was circulated Tuesday praying the "powers that be" to defer the time of commencing ball games until 4:40, that the employes of this office might arrive in time to see the "begincement" of each game. This is our first knowledge of a paper being circulated during the past year, the signing of which did not cost us at least a quarter.

It is suggested that the move to the new building should be made a sanitary movement, and the divisions be formed into hot-air and cold air companies. Thus, some could thaw out and others could freeze out. This is suggested by one of the "spesseses," who also is a "compositoress," and is not "hot-air" either.

Apropos of the above, let me say that one man begged off Wednesday because the atmosphere was too chilly. Another argument in favor of "class legislation."

Wm. T. Hall, chief of the ring alley, is taking a two weeks' vacation, coming in very opportune to see the wind up at Bennings.

Jackson alley, between the new and old buildings of the G. P. O., is as neat as a pin since it has been repaved. It is a popular resort for smokers at noon hour.

The question has often been asked: "Why does J. A. Openshaw wear a beard?" The answer comes rather late—that he is papa, and must look it if he does not feel so.

In conformity with the law of Congress the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds issued a permit giving amateur ball players the longed-for privilege to play on the Monument Grounds. With a permit like this to show the boys, Fred Berger would surely succeed in organizing a team.

It will be consolation to the printer who struggles with long "Dutch" words, to know that Emperor William is interested in simplifying the German language. A Chicago paper offers him the following rules: "Cut out every other syllable in words more than a foot and a half long. Shorten all words so that it will be possible for German authors to write short stories. Abolish all words that are so long that they have to be run serially when printed. Abolish all words that you have to take two looks to see. Do not have more than sixteen consonants to one word."

CARNEGIE'S DREAM.

Andrew Carnegie had a dream one night
Which, when he woke, made earthly pathways bright.
It seems he wandered by St. Peter's gate,
And found that he was twenty minutes late.
Exceeding wealth had made Carnegie bold;
So, as on earth, he strenuously strolled,
Lost in the emptiness of mortal fame.
But soon he heard St. Peter call: "Your name?
Carnegie? Then I'd seek, if I were you,
The Needle's Eye. Perhaps you can squeeze through."
At this Carnegie felt some slight dismay,
And trembled as he heard the voice: "This way!"
Yet he strode forward at a rapid pace
Till, where the Needle's Eye once had a place,
Lo, o'er a spacious portal his own bust
Was niched mid sculptured emblems of the just,
And safe where wealth could burden him no more
Carnegie passed through the Library Door.
—WILLIAM TIPTON TALBOTT.

NO "FALL OUT OF" OR WITH BR'ER BLOOMER.

Perish ignobly the thought
Which gave rise to the rumor
That for a moment I sought
A "fall out of" friend Bloomer.
Nay, nay, much rather, indeed,
Even thus early in spring,
Do I most humbly concede
That bloomer's the real blooming thing,
Since he knows well what he says,
And says well what he knows,
And by no devious ways
Aimeth Starward his blows.
Yet far apart from these facts,
'Tis beyond reason or rhyme,
Knowing how Dame Nature acts
To trot out a fall in springtime.
—MCPIKE.

Says the rain to the dust
In a tone of disgust.
"To be candid and just
You can look for a flood;
Onto you I will be,
And ere long you will see
You're not in it with me,
Because your name will be mud."
—MCPIKE.

VAGARIES.

There was an old lady of Cork,
She married a long-legg'd stork;
Mr. Storky was nimble
And danced on a thimble
To please this old lady from Cork.

Young Dumpling Head to his mother said,
"Ma, cook my shoes for supper!"
His ma replied, "I'll cook your hide,
For its tougher than shoe leather!"

Old Dennis was watchful and sly,
And all used to call him "Wise Guy,"
But he roar'd like a thunder
And holler'd blue murder
When prick'd on the nose by a fly.

A queer old dame was Ma Bigger,
With plenty of shekels to swagger;
She saw a giraffe
And exclaim'd with a laugh,
"Just the face and neck of my daughter."

The pigs in the clover
Declared they would never
Come down to a diet of hay;
The fellow who own'd them
Then said he would treat them
To boarding-house pie every day.

To Mrs. Jones was loan'd the bones
Miss Murphy sav'd for supper;
So Mrs. Jones scraped well the bones
And made a hearty dinner.
Then Mrs. Jones return'd the bones
Miss Murphy loan'd for dinner,
And told Miss Murphy that the bones
Had marrow left for supper.

There was a young lady of Chester
And the boys of the town used to jest her
When she ask'd for a ring
From the son of a king,
He said "Nit; I'm to marry your mother."
—BRUTUS.

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. VII. No. 43. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 1903. Price, 3 Cents.

THE COMMISSIONER OF LABOR

William S. Waudby Indorsed by the Labor Press for the Position.

CHOICE OF ORGANIZED LABOR

Printer, Unionist, and Writer on Labor Topics—Position Should Go to a Representative of Organized Labor—Would Be a Well-Deserved Promotion.

There is arising in all branches of organized labor such a cry for the promotion of William S. Waudby, special agent and statistician of the Bureau of Labor, to the position of the Commissioner that it is believed the President and Secretary Cortelyou will not fail to recognize it. His fitness for the place, acquired by years of experience; his sterling unionism, vouched for by a life's devotion to its interests; his ability, as shown by the strength of his writings and his successful work, are bringing to his support the representatives of organized labor, who recognize that the Commissionership of Labor is a position which belongs to labor, and that Mr. Waudby is the most available and entirely satisfactory man for the place. This demand is not from one section alone, but is growing in strength in the West as well as in the East, and is not confined to labor bodies and journals, but is found in the columns of papers of all shades of politics. All the Washington papers have given space to Mr. Waudby's candidacy, the New York Journal has published a number of articles on the subject, and labor organizations are daily indorsing him. Extracts are given below, some of which go extensively into Mr. Waudby's career as a unionist:

William S. Waudby.

[From the Detroit Times.]

Detroit labor men are taking an active interest in the effort now being made to have a representative union man chosen by President Roosevelt as a successor to the Hon. Carroll D. Wright upon that gentleman's voluntary retirement from the office of Commissioner of Labor at Washington. The Department of Labor has recently been absorbed by the new Department of Commerce and Labor, and it is reported from Washington that the present Commissioner is to retire soon, to devote his entire time to the presidency of Clark College, at Worcester, Mass., to which office he was chosen nearly a year ago. In retiring from his office, held by him since the first organization of the Bureau, Colonel Wright will not drop out of the field of industrial inquiry, as he will still be a contributor to magazines and newspapers on various phases of the labor question.

Most of the active organized labor men in the country are advocating the selection by the President of William S. Waudby, now a resident of Rochester, N. Y., as the successor to Commissioner Wright. Mr. Waudby was one of the legislative committee of the labor organizations before Congress at the time the bill was made a law which created the Labor Bureau, and was appointed by Commissioner Wright as one of the first special agents of the Bureau. He is still a special agent, and as such has had a wide range and an extensive field for observation of the needs of the workers.

Mr. Waudby is a member of the Typographical Union and a writer of note on labor subjects. His experience in the public service, it is claimed by his friends, has eminently qualified him for the duties of his position soon to be vacated by his chief, and organized labor generally is asking the President to appoint him. Mr. Waudby's host of friends and acquaintances in Detroit wish him success in his effort.

The following letter on the subject from Joseph A. Labadie is self-explanatory:

Editor of the Times:

You're right about the Commissionership of the National Department of Labor. A man whose sympathies are pronounced in the interest of the labor movement in its large scope should occupy this position, and I know the man who would just fill the bill. His name is William Waudby. Mr. Waudby has been with the Department since its organization, and as special agent has done some of the European countries, and at one time was assigned to secure the relative cost production of the leading articles in the manufacturing industries of Great Britain and Ireland, as well as the prevailing rates of wages. Mr. Waudby is a thorough man, knows the purposes of the Department, has had experience, and is in every way competent for the position.

Besides this he is a staunch trades unionist and has a great grasp of every phase of the social-industrial movement. He is a printer by trade; has been a member of New York "Big Six," and the Washington Union and others, represented the I. T. U. at the Paris Labor Congress of 1889, and was a member of the legislative committee of the A. F. of L. He founded the Craftsman in Washington in 1883, and has been a contributor to the press for years, the author of several pamphlets on industrial questions, and his last work is an article in the April number of Frank Leslie's Monthly on the "Children of Labor."

In my large acquaintance of men in the labor movement, as well as outside of it, I know of no one who is better fitted for the National Labor Commissionership.

It is my earnest wish the President will see his way clear to the appointing of Mr. Waudby to this position.

JOSEPH A. LABADIE.

DETROIT, April 1.

[From the Rochester Labor Journal.]

Mr. William S. Waudby, one of the special agents of the United States Department of Labor, is being favorably advocated by organized labor as the successor of Commissioner Wright upon the acceptance of that official's resignation, which was placed in the hands of President Roosevelt last fall, Colonel Wright having accepted the presidency of Clark College, at Worcester, Mass. The promotion of Mr. Waudby to the Commissionership would be a well-merited recognition of his abilities for the position, as well as an act of justice to the labor organizations which created this Department of the Government.

Mr. Waudby has been one of the special agents since May 18, 1885, having been appointed by Commissioner Wright when the Bureau was organized under the Interior Department. He was subsequently assigned to Great Britain and Ireland to secure statistics relative to the cost of production of the leading articles in the manufacturing industries as well as the prevailing rates of wages.

In 1888 he was the representative for the International Typographical Union of North America at the Paris Labor Congress, being a member of "Big Six," of New York. Consequently he is well known in labor circles aside from the fact that he is a frequent and proficient writer upon subjects connected with the labor problems of the day. His article upon the "Children of Labor," in the April issue of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, is a masterly one. His duties have taken him to nearly every city and town in the United States, and his powers of observation and judgment of human nature have fitted him pre-eminently for the position of Commissioner of Labor, should these qualifications be taken into consideration when the new Commissioner is appointed.

Mr. Waudby, whose home is at 77 Hobart street, this city, spent his boyhood days in Ohio, and at the age of thirteen was apprenticed to the printing trade in the city of Columbus, joining Typographical Union, No. 5, when he became a journeyman, and holding the various executive offices in that organization. He afterwards worked on the New York Herald and later in the Government Printing Office. In 1883 he founded a labor paper in the latter city, The Craftsman.

While serving as a member of the legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor, the act creating a National Bureau of Labor was passed. He has also actively served in an official capacity in various labor organizations in Washington. Mr. Waudby is an expert in the matter of labor statistics and is so recognized throughout the country.

[From the Rochester (N. Y.) Evening Times—Editorial.]

If fitness, experience, popularity, and considerations of promotion obtain in the selection of a Commissioner of Labor to succeed Carroll D. Wright, William S. Waudby, of this city, is the man for the place. He has been connected with the Department since it was created and has every qualification for the Commissionership.

PRINTERS INDORSE WILLIAM S. WAUDBY.

Providence Typographical Union, No. 33, recently indorsed the candidacy of William S. Waudby, of Rochester, N. Y., for United States Commissioner of Labor. The resignation of Carroll D. Wright is now in the hands of President Roosevelt. Mr. Waudby has been a special agent of the Department for over nineteen years. He is receiving much encouragement from his many friends throughout the country.

[From the Rochester Evening Times, April 6, 1903.]

At the regular monthly meeting of Typographical Union, No. 15, held Sunday afternoon in Columbia Hall, resolutions indorsing William S. Waudby, a member of the International Typographical Union for the past thirty years and a resident of this city, for the position of United States Commissioner of Labor, to succeed Hon. Carroll D. Wright, resigned, were passed by unanimous vote. These resolutions will be forwarded to every subordinate union throughout the country with a request that similar action be taken.

The announcement that Mr. William S. Waudby, of this city, special agent of the United States Department of Labor is being favorably advocated by organized labor for the office of United States Commissioner of Labor, to succeed Commissioner Carroll D. Wright, whose resignation was tendered to President Roosevelt last fall, will be received by every member of Rochester Typographical Union with much pleasure.

Mr. Waudby has been special agent of the United States Department of Labor for the past eighteen years, and during that time has made a study of matters pertaining to labor and labor organizations and has acquired a knowledge in connection therewith, which, it may be truthfully said, no other man in the United States can surpass. His work as special agent has caused him to visit cities and towns all over this country, as well as Great Britain and Ireland, so that his experience is of an international nature. He understands the labor movement in all its details from its inception up to the present time.

Mr. Waudby's scholarly articles in the Typographical Journal from time to time have been read with interest and profit, and his latest production, "Children of Labor," in the April number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, is particularly creditable and valuable. These articles show distinctly that Mr. Waudby possesses a keen sense of observation and a plain, matter-of-fact but fluent method of writing.

Mr. Waudby is receiving much encouragement from all parts of the United States in support of his candidacy for the Commissionership. He has many personal friends in all branches of labor, as well as outside labor circles, and his appointment by President Roosevelt would be well received. If merit, experience, knowledge, and general equipment are accepted by the President as the necessary qualifications for the office of Commissioner of Labor, we are of the opinion that Mr. Waudby will secure the appointment. We believe he deserves the promotion.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

To advocate the printing of the International souvenir by the Inland Printer or any other out-of-town house were little short of a crime. The convening of the International at Washington is not the holding of the county fair at Kankakee or Kokomo, where they must needs send to the city for their lurid poster. So doing, with what grace could we protest to the District Commissioners against the sending of their printing to Baltimore and Philadelphia? However, I shall lose little sleep over the proposition, having unbounded faith in the good sense of the committee having the matter in charge.

Because a man may be doing time is no reason his sphere of usefulness is ended, as witness the following advertisement from the Delaware (Ohio) Farm and Home:

In this whirl of talk of Munsey and two or three other publishers, it is well to pause and realize that after all there are other periodicals. For instance, there is The Sun Worshipper, of Chicago, which has changed its name to The Mazdaznan. Do not allow these important things to escape your attention!

Hecht & Co. Still Unfair.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

I desire through your columns to rectify a rather misleading statement which appeared in your issue of March 26, under the report of the Central Labor Union, regarding the report of the special committee appointed by the Federation of Labor of Baltimore to reopen and investigate the grievances existing between Local No. 262, Retail Clerks' International Protective Association, of this city, and Hecht & Co.

As the statement appears a casual reader might believe that the report of the committee was unfavorable. On the contrary, the committee specifically recommended in their report that the firm of Hecht & Co. be placed upon the unfair list of the Federation of Labor of Baltimore as soon as requested by Local No. 409, R. C. I. P. A., of that city.

This statement is made more because of the difficulty surrounding the effort to have Hecht & Co. placed upon the unfair list in the city of Baltimore, and to show as exactly as possible the attitude of organized labor of that city toward the local movement.

Thanking you in anticipation of your courtesy in printing this letter, and believing the publication of the same will serve the desired ends, I am,

Fraternally yours,
G. B. SQUIRES,
President Local No. 262,
R. C. I. P. A.

SANDWICHES AND RUN-DOWNS.

The Union Building has a Dunn and a Dunne, and both poets.

We have two Burgesses, two McCormicks, Wilsons without number, and Woods to burn.

Col. Jack Towers is again on duty in the proof room, after a long and serious period of illness.

"Shorty" Welsh's pool on the Corbett-McGovern fight went to one of his "buddies" in the bindery.

Our diminutive messenger boy has so much coin it makes him lopsided, and the Bennings meet has two weeks yet to run.

Harry ("Rube") Springer was a recent visitor, having run over from Baltimore, where he is a reader on the Herald.

One of the Union Building binders ran a $2 note up to $200 the first week, and "Diamond Bill" Barth has to feed at the lunch counter.

Leaves of absence are being enjoyed in this glorious springtime by quite a large number of "Spess" folks, and a lot more would like to have some.

Sunday work at the "Spess" is something unusual, but the work is running so heavy that more room is necessary or overtime will be the rule rather than the exception.

One of the lady "compositoresses" in the "side show" is said to have picked the winners to the extent of several hundred last week, and all owing to "Fatty" Payne as a mascot.

One of the handsome widowers of the "side show" has been so attentive to one of the ladies of the press room recently that an alarm clock has been put into action as a means of breaking up the daily conferences.

And now the new building is not to be turned over to the Public Printer until after July 1, according to the Star; but, according to the same authority, the turning over was done last November. So there you are!

Among the last batch of "recruits" sent up here was Jimmy Harper. Jimmy doesn't look it, but "Tommy" Tompkins says Harper was a "jour." when he was a kid, and that must have been about the time old Fred Claxton left Leesburg.

E. N. Kerrott, of the proof room, has been piloting his brother from Chicago (who has been the foreman of Rand & McNally's job department for the past quarter of a century or more) about the Capital City for the past two weeks, seeing the sights and renewing old acquaintanceships.

John Sturgis, the rooter of all the rooters, took in the first game of ball, and the send-off he got as he broke for the elevator must have convinced him that his prestige as a baseball oracle is still supreme. The smile on John's countenance next morning as he related how our boys did it was good to behold and made his resemblance to President Roosevelt all the more marked.

A better selection for delegate from this department could hardly be made than Miss Laura B. Gordon. Miss Gordon is a well known and highly respected member of the Union, always ready and willing to perform any duty imposed, and her deeds of charity are innumerable. She is the head and front of the new Woman's Auxiliary, besides being a member of the board of directors of the Union Relief Association, and would make a very creditable representative for Columbia Union.

A BIT OF ALL SORTS.

St. Louis will be the convention Mecca in 1904.

The press feeders' campaign is over and three of the girls were winners.

A Baltimore paper recently chronicled the attendance at some social function of J. William Leeper. I'll bet he's got money and is wearing pajamas.

The Darby branch office in Atlanta is now a full-fledged rat concern like the parent house. It didn't stay union very long, and the concessions made by Atlanta Union were of no benefit.

Assistant Fire Chief Billy Belt should get one of our newspapers to teach him a few stunts in etiquette, and perhaps then the Commissioners might recognize his practical fitness for head of the Fire Department.

Where is there a paper that issues 20 pages daily as does our Evening Star? I don't see one published anywhere that has the steady daily advertising patronage of that paper, and I doubt if there is a paper in the world that pays better as an investment.

I wonder if the Washington contingent out at the Home have a copy of Donnelly's Gazette to while away the long hours. Adrian Jones, "Shad" Campbell, Otho Doughty, and Jimmy McGill were valued contributors to that publication in the halcyon days.

The W. R. Hearst Washington daily paper rumor seems to have died out. With his three great journals in New York, Chicago, and San Francisco, and a Presidential boom on his hands, it would seem as if he would hardly have any time to spare to launch a paper here.

Orlando Jones, one of the most successful bookmakers in the country, is the son of old "Pap" Jones, for many years a shining light in printing circles here. "Pap," like Mr. Toots, had the faculty of getting names very much mixed and always called his son "Oleander."

The same good old liberal baseball management in Washington! Take the coin of us suckers for even practice games. And still we go. Will Foxy Tom sell Delehanty? Why, sure! It will be made to appear that "Del." is not popular here, and they'll get some ham-fat player and a good wad of the green stuff. See if they don't.

The Washington Typothetae enjoyed a harmony feast Saturday evening last. The harmony between certain members of that body is of the brand existing between Grover and William J. I am pleased, though, at their getting together, and hope in the near future to see the eight-hour day put in force by them without a roar, as it is bound to be.

The Washington police will be kept so busy looking out for a chance to hale some one to the police court for spitting on the sidewalk, or chasing the poor Dagos who are trying to eke out a living by selling bananas from their push-carts, or arresting some worthy persons who dare to walk into this city seeking employment, that our population will be largely increased by the influx of grafters of all sorts, who are being driven out of other cities where the police are employed in performing proper police duty.

John J. Lynch, assistant foreman of the New York Journal press room, was down to the races last week, and gave me a call. Jack has been a delegate from "Big 51" to the last four conventions, and is in the race again this year, with a good chance of winning. He says they will have 20 delegates, and there are 48 candidates. He also says the New York feeders will send 23 delegates, and there are 98 aspirants for the honor. It seems as though there are some politicians among the pressmen and feeders of New York.

Every convention of the I. T. U. that I attended developed some character who was a delight to the fellows who enjoy the humorous, and the Pittsburg meeting was no exception. Erie, Pa., had a delegate there who was a peach. In appearance he very much resembled "Maud S.," if anything, considerably longer and no broader of beam. He got into Pittsburg considerably ahead of time so as not to miss any of it, and had accumulated a "bun" by the time we reached there that had about exhausted his appropriation. He was a mixer of the thirty-third degree and knew everybody within three blocks of the hotel the day after his arrival. He laid siege to the heart of a buxom widow who kept a little candy store in the vicinity, and I verily believe introduced every delegate, to which the lady was not averse, as she profited not a little by the increase in trade. Jerry Connolly, of Syracuse, a practical joker, took quite a fancy to the gentleman from Erie, and made much sport with him. Jerry prevailed upon him to engage the widow for the banquet—the event of the week—and we fixed Erie up with a standing collar, white tie, etc., that added not a little to his grotesque appearance, and everybody was anticipating some fun on the appearance of Erie and his buxom partner at the festive board, but at the last moment the lady backed out and spoilt the joke. A purse had been made up and Erie was slated for a trip on here to see the Capital, but the coolness of his inamorata so preyed upon him that he hied himself back to his Pennsylvania home instead.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

A Well Attended Meeting and Considerable Business Transacted.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades was held Tuesday evening, April 7, at Typographical Temple.

Meeting called to order at the regular hour by Chairman Meitzler.

Roll call disclosed the presence of 27 delegates representing 15 local unions.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Credentials were received from Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers' Union, No. 102, certifying Delegates Nairn, Berrier, and Winkleman as representatives of that union. The credentials were accepted and delegates seated.

COMMUNICATIONS.

A communication was received from Interior Marble Workers, Local Union No. 5, enclosing agreement which had been submitted to them from committee looking toward a settlement of difficulties exisiting between their union and the Tile Setters, which they refused to endorse. The communication was referred back to the committee with a request to call for a further conference of the two unions.

A communication was received from Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, enclosing copy of what is known as the National Association of Builders' agreement. The communication was read and referred to the Executive Committee.

A communication was received from John M. Love, secretary of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union of Philadelphia, containing a list of names of persons scabbing on two jobs in that city and who are supposed to be members of Washington unions. Referred to Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers' Union and Wood, Wire and Metal Lathers' Union for investigation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Delegates from Central Labor Union stated that Painters' Union was still showing an improved spirit toward this committee, and urged the committee having in charge the affiliation of all building trades represented in the Central Labor Union, but not in this committee, to hasten their action. Referred to Committee.

They also stated that it had been reported that the Eccentric Engineers' Assembly of Knights of Labor had returned their charter to the Knights of Labor.

The committee having in charge the trouble of Marble Mosaic and Granito Workers on the Willard office building reported the matter in a fair way for a settlement.

The Hall Committee reported that they had an offer to rent a large building, containing three halls, besides other office rooms, for $1,200 per year, and suggested that a committee of five be appointed to investigate the proposition. Concurred in, and the Chair appointed Delegates Van Ness, Ratigan, McClelland, Allison, Maloney, Winkleman, and Stevens.

The Business Agent made his report for the week, which was accepted and salary ordered paid.

The Secretary-Treasurer submitted the financial statement for the quarter ending March 31, 1903, which was referred to a committee consisting of Delegates Nolte and McClelland.

ROLL CALL.

Stone Laborers reported that their agreements were being signed by many of their employers and that no trouble was anticipated.

Hod Carriers asked the assistance of the Executive Committee with the Geo. A. Fuller Company, who refused to employ union hod carriers on the New Willard Hotel. Granted.

Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers stated that they had asked for an increase of wages to go into effect May 1.

Wood, Wire, and Metal Lathers stated that they had changed their way of working from piece work to day work, and asked all union men to assist them by asking all lathers to show card.

Steam Fitters denied the statements made by Mr. Walker, of Yale Laundry, as made to Mr. Weller.

Machinists reported that the Portner Brewing Company had contracted for engine from unfair firm, and that they were enforcing their eight-hour day.

The Hall Committee were instructed to arrange for an entertainment in near future.

Oyster pan roast, 10c. R. A. Driscoll's, N. Cap. and G sts. Overholt whisky, 10c.

Won't reap as many golden dollars
As he who climbs a tree and hollers.
—JOHN A. ONYUN.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

In another week or so we will be in the throes of the campaign, though I haven't heard of any offices being contested for except delegate so far. The different practices of different candidates are quite amusing—to one not a candidate. Some will approach the voter quite diffidently and scarcely do more than leave his card; others will insert the auger deeply and work at it until they get an answer of some kind; others yet will attack vigorously, but not aggressively—"I want to be a delegate; if you can help me I will be glad of your assistance," and pass on. As a rule, I think a man's personal efforts do not count for very much. After showing himself he has done about all that he really can do to help himself. His friends work for him and they pull him through or they don't. A direct question, "Will you vote for me?" is productive of much lying, for it is generally answered affirmatively, whether intended to be fulfilled or not, and is really an indelicate piece of mendicancy of which no self respecting man should be guilty. To hand a voter a card announcing one's candidacy is asking for his vote. To do more than that is practically to ask to be permitted to take charge of the voter's judgment and do his voting for him. Once in a while a candidate will injure himself by overcanvassing. People get weary of seeing the same man go through the room every few days, and they sometimes make derogatory remarks which lose him the votes of the undecided. It is much better for a candidate to let his friends do the importuning; they can say more for him than he can say for himself. A candidate's anxiety to be elected, he should remember, is participated in only by a few of his most intimate friends, and is really not a factor with most voters, who want to know why they should vote for a particular man. Oh, but it's nice to be able to comment disinterestedly on elections.

* * * *

Vice-President Edgar B. Meritt has developed delegatorial aspirations, and I know of no reason at all why his ambition should not be gratified. He is a capable, able, respectable, clean Arkansas man, who, though having practically nothing whatever to do, has been a very creditable vice-president, because we felt sure that if ever the presidential office should devolve upon him he would be equal to all emergencies; and that is all a vice-president is for under our plan of organization. If Mr. Meritt wants to be a delegate the union might easily go much farther and fare much worse.

John C. Burke, at one time a proofreader in one of the branches (State, I think) and formerly president of Nonpareil Council, N. U., is flying high up at Newport, R. I. As I mentioned a a year or two ago, he was made probate judge there early in his career, and now he is receiver for a failed national bank in that city—a job the pickings of which are so good that long ago it became a saying, "The receiver is as bad as the thief." Mr. Burke resigned from the G. P. O. almost immediately after graduating at Georgetown Law School, and his upward progress since has been rapid, and it is scarcely four years since he left here. He has a handsome property there, with about ten acres of ground, overlooking the ocean, and is enjoying what comes to a man who has the nerve to get out and hustle after taking his degree. But, alas! we can't all be Burkes!

DRIVEL.

If stung when you disturb a bee,
You'd likely use hyperbole;
Now cut out saying "hyperbole"—
It's so distressing to the soul.

The proper way to pronounce "leisure"
Makes it a perfect rhyme for "seizure:"
It shocks one's ears beyond all measure
To hear you call this good word "leisure."

The great south sea called "Caribbean"
Is sounded just like "Galilean;"
Not like the ancient desert, Libyan,
As so many call "Caribbean."

The President's name is really "Roosevelt,"
And makes a splendid rhyme for "blows felt;"
Too frequently 'tis called "Roosevelt,"
Specially by those who of booze smelt.

"When I was an apprentice in Hagerstown," said T. E. McCardell, of the Night Bill Force, "during the war, while I was in the office alone one day, General Lee came in, with a small guard of soldiers, and made me print a proclamation for him. The Confederate army was then on its way north. When the job was done the General offered me a Confederate five-dollar bill.

"'It is of no use to me,' I said. 'It won't pass here.'

"'It will pass anywhere when we come back from this campaign,' said he.

"Well, it was worth less than ever when the Confederates came back on their retreat, but if I had taken it, it would be worth a good deal more than its face value as a souvenir now.

"In 1870 and '71 I was working on the old Globe, when Major Lewis was foreman. I remember one afternoon a speech of Senator W. T. Hamilton, of Maryland, was running, and he wrote the worst hand anybody ever did. Copy was running out very slowly and the Major got to looking around for the men. He found the wash room full and he hustled them into the composing room and gave every man of them two takes of Hamilton. There was a lot of swearing, but they went to work. The man who got the last take noticed that it was signed by the Senator, and after the proof was read he stole the sheet of copy, took it to the Government Printing Office as a letter of recommendation, and got a situation on it. He said it was a letter of recommendation, and nobody could read enough of it to dispute his claim."

* * * *

Joseph H. Babcock is a candidate for delegate, D. J. Roberts having refused to permit his name to be used. "Bab" is a ready speaker and takes an active interest in labor matters in general, besides his particular devotion to the welfare of the union of which he has been so long a member, here and elsewhere, and his valuable service as delegate to the Central Labor Union. It is my opinion that "Bab" will give his competitors something to think about.

* * * *

I was very much gratified at receiving a commendatory note from Theodore Hodes on my article last week in reply to the Progressive Printer's assault on the G. P. O. It makes any fellow feel good to know that at least some one appreciates his efforts and will take the trouble to tell him of it.

* * * *

Thomas J. Fitzwilliam, of the Job Room, has entered the lists for delegate and has enough friends to make him a very likely winner. Mr. Fitzwilliam is a Galveston (Tex.) boy who has been here several years, and his acquaintance throughout the union is sufficiently general to warrant the belief that he will be elected.

The Ex-Delegates' Association met last Sunday at Typographical Temple, President W. R. Ramsey in the chair, with the other officers present. The committees all made brief reports, the state of the finances was shown by Treasurer C. W. Otis, and Secretary J. T. Herbert presented the business of the meeting. Some few of the members have not yet paid all their dues, and there is a balance of something over $400 in the treasury. A proposition presented by J. M. Kreiter to have the association photographed in a group and printed in the Convention Souvenir was discussed. It was decided not to publish a separate souvenir. There was a fair attendance. Adjourned to meet on the fourth Monday in May.

From a copy of the Rocky Mountain News of March 31, sent me by W. E. Shields, I learn that James F. Egan, for twenty-one years a compositor on that paper and one of the best known men of his profession, died at 7 p. m. on March 30, at St. Joseph's Hospital, Denver, of dropsy of the heart. He had worked the fore part of the day, but was taken suddenly ill and fell fainting at his machine. He was 48 years old and had gone to Denver from Lafayette, Ind., the place of his birth. He left a widow and a daughter of 13 years. As there are probably several old Denver men, as well as others, here who knew Mr. Egan, I have given the facts about as they were printed in the News.

* * * *

No down-town candidate for delegate has announced himself so far except James Lacoste Rodier, and he was so very modest about it that I only heard of it the other day. Mr. Rodier is a man whose ability and staunch unionism need no words from me, and as its down-town representative Columbia Union's interests will be in good hands if he shall be elected. True, he has some bitter enemies—the man who has not is without friends worthy of the name. When I said there was no other down-town candidate I did not think of Frank Bates, and I really don't know how he classes himself. He was in the G. P. O. when he announced himself.

* * * *

The candidacy of William S. Waudby for Commissioner of Labor brings to mind the campaign in which he and Johnny Burnside were candidates for sergeant-at-arms of the union, about twenty years ago. That was a campaign reversed. Waudby electioneered for Burnside, and Burnside for Waudby. "Vote for Burnside!" was Waudby's appeal. "Vote for Waud!" urged Burnside. This novel sort of campaign so muddled up the voters that there were only two votes difference between them at the count—in favor of Burnside, I think.

George W. Harvel, of the First Division, Night Force, one of the talented members of Columbia Union from a theatrical standpoint, is given a large three-column illustration in the Clipper for March 28, showing him in the performance of some of his most successful acts as a ventriloquist and lightning change artist. From his ordinary dress he changes to a one-legged man, and with a dummy, made up as a double of himself, makes his reappearance in seven seconds. He has played many successful engagements and many of our members have seen his performance he having been a part of the show gotten up by the Entertainment Committee last fall. He is in receipt of a number of flattering offers, but prefers a job in the G. P. O. to anything in sight just now—not that his present compensation bears any comparison to what he is offered, but because the comfort of his present life more than counterbalances the salary and hard work of the theater.

* * * *

"Petey" Ellis, of the First Division, Night Force, quietly celebrated his fifty-second birthday last Thursday, and in the evening, after they had gone to work, he was the recipient of many little tokens in honor of the day. Among the number were a drum, a trumpet, a hammer, a vise, and a rattle with gum ring and bells—these from his fellow-workmen—and a hatchet from the Women's Club, accompanied by a neat letter of congratulation. These little attentions go far to keep up the thorough sympathy and good-fellowship existing among the members of the Night Force and act as reminders that others rejoice with us on our own festive occasions. It is a sad work-a-day world at best, and they show a disposition to lighten the cares of life who remember to bring at each recurring birthday some token that our joys are theirs as well.

"Why don't you nominate Sam McBride for delegate?" asked Brockwell of me the other night.

"Oh, I don't know just why I haven't," I answered. "He's one of the best equipped men in the Union. I don't believe he knows where Typographical Temple is, or what day the Union meets, or even if it continues to hold regular meetings."

"Do you know," said Brocky, "that Sam used to be one of the rip-tarinest union men in the world—regular square man? That was out in West Virginia."

"That reminds me," continued Brocky. "There are a lot of fellows who think that a man who attends the meetings regular is after something. One of 'em said to me one day:

"'Look here, Brockwell, what are you up to, any way? Every time I go to a union meeting—which aint very often—I find you there. What's your scheme?'

"'Oh, I don't know,' said I. 'I like to know what is going on—that's all.'

"'That'll do to tell some people, Brockwell, but it won't go with me. You're up to some game. Whenever a man goes to all the union meetings he's after something. Now, what is it?"

"And I couldn't make that fellow believe but what I had some deep sinister purpose. There's lots more like him, too."

* * * *

Dan Vaughan is reported to be in training for vice-president, and if he wants it, I don't know anybody who would perform those arduous duties more acceptably. I'm for Vaughan all the time.

* * * *

J. W. Walker, formerly of the Fourth Division, is doing great work as an organizer of the Endowment Rank, Knights of Pythias, in Southern Ohio and Kentucky. Jim is an all-right hustler when he gets started.

* * * *

The election of Charles H. Schulte as a delegate by the pressmen is most gratifying to his printer friends, and he is one of the ablest men in their organization.

* * * *

John A. Onyun, N. B. F., is out for delegate, and as an old and experienced politician he will make the others hustle. In Oynun is strength, and combined with beer and limburger makes one of the most potent perfumes. Hurrah for Onyun!

* * * *

On Wednesday I heard that Mark Barnum, Job Room, is a candidate for delegate. Having no time to run the rumor down, I give it for what it is worth.

* * * *

Joe Stelle was elected to an office in Orient Commandery last Monday night, but declined. We have a cinch that he won't decline to be a delegate if we elect him.

* * * *

Last winter, when some of the plundering coal dealers were holding people up for $15 and $18 per ton for coal, one of them, on being told that he would be remembered for it when coal reached its normal figure, remarked:

"H—ll, I'll advertise coal for 25 cents less than the market price and gain three customers for every one I lose."

Some of them have begun operations under this plan already, knowing that the more timid are likely to jump at the first chance to lay in a supply for fear of another famine. Remember these people! The man who overcharged you by $7.50 on a ton last winter can afford to give back 25 cents on summer purchases and still be $7.25 to the good. If you had a dealer who served you at the regular rates, or no higher than $7.50, cling to him now "with hooks of steel." If you had no such dealer, find one out. I can give the names of two or three and would be glad to give more. These are Phillips & Juenemann, John J. Connelly, and the Burgess Bros. Those who advertise cut rates now, after robbing you all winter, will bear watching, as some of them have short-weight records and reputations for mixing in inferior coal and small sizes in order to swindle you. Stand by those who stood by you. The man who advertises to sell below the established price is the scab of the trade and no more to be trusted than other scabs.

The innocence of childhood is charming. A G. P. O. man has a most interesting little daughter who likes to visit and prattle to an elderly neighbor. One day she was accompanied by a little dog.

"That's a nice dog," said the neighbor. "What's its name?"

"His name is Booze."

"That's a funny name for a dog. Why did you give him such a name?"

"Why, papa was full of booze when he brought him, and mamma named him."

First Division.

Have you had your hair pulled this morning?

Glenn W. Buckingham resigned last week and will go to Texas.

M. A. Bodenhamer and L. M. Devine were transferred from the Night Bill Force to this division.

"Pard" Bloomer, in last week's notes, wonders why he never met Mr. Roberts during his travels. Perhaps Mr. Roberts saw him first.

The following compositors are on leave: John O'Neill, Ed. T. Latham, J. B. Harris, Frank J. Maloy, W. R. Love, C. W. Radley, John J. Heron, and Jacob C. Lesher.

It certainly ill becomes any one to get angry when they try to perpetrate a joke on another and the tables are turned. No offense is intended in any of my notes, and as Nelson Moyer would say: "A yoke is a yoke, no matter dot it be on mineself."

Otis W. McKee, of Missouri, who worked in this room until about 1899, died last Friday from tuberculosis. Mr. McKee left here and went to New Mexico for the benefit of his health and returned about two years ago to accept a position in the Census Office, which he had to resign on account of his old trouble.

I heartily indorse all that "Pard" Bloomer says in regard to the subscription lists that are passed around. It is not the compositor who puts his name down on the list that does the kicking, but the one who refuses. No one has a right to question a man's motive for not subscribing, but it looks bad for a chairman to refuse to pass around a list as there may be some who would like to subscribe, and as the lists are approved by the front office it is not the duty of the chairman to question them.

The positive announcement for delegatorial honors of J. H. Babcock was received with pleasure in the First Division. "Joe" has the hearty indorsement of the force of this division. He has been a faithful and consistent worker for trades unionism both in Columbia Union and in the Central Labor Union, to which troublous body he has acted as chairman of our delegation for three years. His fitness for the position is conceded by all, and his long and active participation in labor matters has qualified him for the place better than perhaps most of the delegates in attendance will be. Voters seeking a man for merit alone will make no mistake in voting for him.

The second series of games between Alleys 11 and 19, for the championship of the room, was played last Tuesday night at the Rathskeller. The following score was made:

ALLEY 19.

Second Division.

Mr. E. B. Meritt, of this division, has announced himself as a candidate for delegate.

Here's hoping that the Chief of the Nation will have a pleasant trip and return home safely.

Mr. R. A. Julian has gone away on seventeen days' leave. Hope he will have a good time.

W. J. Phillips, one of our swiftest compositors, who hails from the Lone Star State, is enjoying a few days' leave.

Dan Vaughan, of the proof room, called in to announce the fact that he is a candidate for vice-president. Dan is a good fellow and deserves to win.

"Lute" Woodward, the cut and title-page artist of the annex, is taking a rest for fifteen days, and using up the balance of his leave. Mr. Woodward is an old and trusted employee.

In giving an account of the chapel election last week, Mr. Sowers was down as receiving only one vote. Mr. Sowers is a modest, unassuming gentleman and does not seek any honors in that direction. He was not nominated, and does not know who the guilty party was that voted for him.

It was a good idea to have all men who have leave due them to take it now while work is not so brisk, and thus avoid the necessity of having to lay any one off. It seems to be the policy of the present administration to give all the men employment possible, which policy will be heartily indorsed by us all.

We have had quite a number of visitors in the office during the past week. One day last week a party of ladies, anxious to be instructed in the art preservative, spied one of our knights of the stick busily engaged in handling the silent leaden messengers, and asked to be instructed in the mysteries of the art, and one of our new men, whose name modesty prevents us from mentioning, proceeded to show them how, while all looked on in amazement.

Charles H. Roeder is taking a vacation.

George Robey can tip them off as good as the next man.

J. C. Himmelman is spending part of his leave in Pittsburg.

L. D. Weeks busied himself the fore part of this week setting out apple trees on his plantation.

Frank Lloyd supplied every man at the case with a new measuring pole, a thing of beauty and a joy forever. Frank did a neat job.

H. P. McKevitt came in from the Night Proof Room last Monday. Mr. McKevitt left this division many months ago to serve on the night side.

Marshall T. Hyer, who sustained a severe injury to his right wrist last winter by slipping and falling on a broken milk bottle, has accepted a transfer to a laborer's position. His wound is very slow in healing, and incapacitates him at the case.

This month's Typographical Journal gives an encouraging report of our fight at Los Angeles. Sixty out-of-town advertisers, mentioned by name, are reported to have withdrawn their patronage from the Times. Only eight have refused to align themselves with the union. Success is coming sooner than many anticipated.

The Woman's Union Label League

The semi-monthly meeting of the Woman's Union Label League of the District of Columbia was held on Tuesday evening, 6th instant, at Hockemeyer Hall, 719 Sixth street northwest.

Miss Daniel, president of Women's Bindery Union, presided, and Miss Tolson, of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, acted as secretary.

Communications were received from Mrs. Flewellyn, of the International Union, Woman's Union Label League, and a committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws.

The meeting was addressed by Messrs. Roche, of the Bookbinders; Pfau, of the Clerks, and J. H. Babcock, of Columbia Typographical Union.

The Woman's Union Label League will meet regularly at Hockemeyer Hall on the first and third Tuesdays of each month.

Secretary Garrett, of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, desires to receive any change of address of members of Columbia Union in order to forward same to Secretary Bramwood, and thus receive prompt delivery of the Journal to all members of the union. Secretary Garrett has a copy of the Journal mail list and desires to send the changes back at the earliest opportunity. Chairmen of the various chapels are urged to take this matter up and assist the secretary in securing the desired information.

LOVE'S ROCKY ROAD.

It is strange what a lesson of worry
The lover must ever learn;
First a girl puts his heart in a flurry,
And then her parent stern.

If he yields to love's sweet suggestion
That he on his knees must flop
And successfully pops the question,
Then he has to question the pop.

Sidney J. Marshall's "King of Kor" will be a great literary success if it is equal to its advertisements. The latter recall the following lines from the Washington Post:

Modern novelists remind us
We can be Sir Walter Scotts
If the publishers behind us
Write their "ads" with pleasing plots.

It looks as though Mr. Marshall would force Mr. Kreiter to raise his "peaceful blockade."

Printing Pressmen's Union, No. 1, of this city, held its election for delegates to the International Convention, Saturday evening, April 4. Chas. H. Schulte, Frank B. Clarkson, and William A. Weber were elected delegates and Edward J. Shine, H. Fellinger, and E. A. Baulsir were elected alternates. The interest in the election was very deep and the excitement incident to the contest was at fever heat. Throughout the entire canvass the best of feeling was displayed, the president, R. C. McAuley, taking his defeat for delegate in good spirit. The convention will be held in Cincinnati next June, and Washington Pressmen's Union, No. 1, is to be congratulated on the selection of its representatives in the next convention.

Andrew Carnegie has digressed from his single idea as a library promoter and has offered to pay the expenses of those students of Cornell University who were caught in the typhoid fever epidemic. Andy has all along been averse to individual gifts, except as they came his way; but this late experiment may bear fruit which will suggest to him other avenues no less inviting and praiseworthy.

A general alarm has been turned in by the capitalistic press, which seems to indicate that trouble is expected about May 1, by reason of a demand for increase in wages, or shorter hours, or both, by the toilers who seek a further share in the blessings which come with good times. It is rarely the case that wages are advanced or shorter hours obtained without the asking, else all this trouble would be avoided.

If anything would have a tendency to pry a man loose and cause him to abandon a government job to accept something of less proven value it would be just such a "send off" as Mr. Bloomer gave Colonel Slack last week, referring to the call extended to the Tennessean as managing editor of a contemplated Republican newspaper down in Virginia. There is a great field for missionary work in the Old Dominion, and the Colonel is just the man to harrow and improve the soil without fear of the deadly parallel. Good luck to you Colonel, if you go.

If Robert G. Ingersoll had been less analytical, a little more considerate of the clergy, and more sparing in ridicule, some of the things he said and which are really worth remembering would have given him a place in hearts now estranged. Few men have written with greater pathos or expressed in language more sublime the ideal happiness which may come from right living here, and his home life was such as many of his critics and traducers would do well to imitate. His heart was near to Nature and his hand was not withheld from those in need. A young man who once sought a clerkship here in Washington and who had written for an indorsement from Mr. Ingersoll, received the following characteristic reply: "Young man, I would rather have forty acres of land, with a log cabin on it and the woman I love in the cabin—with a little grassy, winding path leading down to the spring where the water gurgles from the lips of the earth, whistling day and night to the white pebbles a perpetual poem—with hollyhocks growing at the corner of the house, and morning glories blooming over the low-latched door—with lattice work over the window so that the sunlight would fall checked on the dimpled babe in the cradle, and birds—like songs with wings hovering in the summer air—than be the clerk of any government on earth."

The Death of Thaddeus Baden.

The following tribute on the death of Thad. Baden, whose tragic ending was a shock to all who know him as a friend and fellow-employee, was written by one who knew him intimately as an associate in the Government Printing Office. His words are from the heart and betrays a depth of feeling that shows the highest regard in which he held his friend and fellow-associate:

THAD. BADEN.

The death of Thad. Baden, an old employee in the Government Printing Office (Foundry), has taken from our midst one of Nature's noblemen one who never wronged his fellowman, and always tried to do good. His disposition and character was of a kind seldom equaled and never excelled. Only those who knew him intimately could appreciate his loving nature and forgiving spirit, the principal traits that endeared him to all who knew him. He was not a captain of industry, and he modestly avoided all notoriety, but he was a man, "the noblest work of God," whose heart always responded to the calls of the needy and suffering; whose generosity often exceeded his means. His heart was so pure and free from evil thought that in his good works he never questioned creed or color. Thad., dear old Thad., as we knew him, has gone from among us. Never again on earth shall we see his kindly face or hear his cheerful voice, and we, his friends who are left behind, can only hope that God in his goodness will give us the intelligence and wisdom to be as well prepared and worthy to meet Him as our friend who has gone before.

Labor Headquarters.

The Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union at its last meeting appointed a committee to investigate the advisability of having headquarters for the building trades. A hall committee, which has been looking for quarters for the Council, reported that they could secure a large building containing three halls, two parlors, besides other office rooms, also a large recreation room, for $1,500 per annum. The committee would be pleased to confer with all organizations who are desirous of changing their quarters.

Further information may be obtained from E. J. Ratigan, Business Agent of the Council.

The regular meeting was called to order by President Hamerstrom at 8:30 o'clock Monday evening.

From Local No. 188, Journeymen Tailors' Union of America, relative to the recent strike of the members of that union, and asking the co-operation of all union men to promote the label of the custom tailors' union by patronizing union shops. They also asked that the following firms be declared unfair, having refused to sign the agreement:

FLOODING CALIFORNIA.

Enemies of Organized Labor Trying to Break Up the Unions.

[Special Correspondence.]

LOS ANGELES, CAL., April 2, 1903.

Every train arriving in Los Angeles brings mechanics who have been lured hither as a result of literature spread broadcast over the United States by the organized union-haters who curse Southern California with their presence. At the head of this infamous gang is H. C. Otis, proprietor of the notorious scab Los Angeles Times. Organized labor is battering the scab Times from every direction, and in an endeavor to offset this assault Southern California is being flooded with men who can not possible secure employment unless they underbid union men and accept starvation wages. It is for this purpose that they are being enticed here.

During the past week the scab Times has lost the following advertisements:

Herpicide Dandruff Cure, Herpicide Company, Detroit, Mich.

Dr. Shoop Family Medicine Company, Racine, Wis.

Duffy Malt Whisky Company, Rochester, N. Y.

In order to protect itself in the future the Herpicide Company will have inserted in all its advertising contracts the following clause:

If the management of this paper antagonizes unions or organized labor to such an extent that an official declaration of unfairness is made against the paper by a regularly constituted labor organization, having the sanction of its international body, this order may be terminated pro rata.

If every reader of THE TRADES UNIONIST would write letters to the following advertisers in the notorious scab Los Angeles Times, asking that they withdraw and withhold further patronage until they do so, much good would be accomplished:

Cuticura—Potter Drug and Chemical Corporation, Boston, Mass.

Force—The Force Food Company, Buffalo, N. Y.

H. O.—Hornby Oatmeal Company, Buffalo, N. Y.

Postum—Postum Cereal Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

Peruna—Peruna Medical Company, Columbus, Ohio.

Wilson Whisky—Wilson Distilling Company, 100 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

Tutts's Liver Pills—Tutts Manufacturing Company, New York, N. Y.

Scott's Emulsion—Scott & Bowne, 409 Pearl street, New York, N. N.

Wright's Indian Vegetable Pill Company, New York.

Will you write a letter to each of the above?

The scab Times will not be permitted to disrupt organized labor on the Pacific Coast.

UNION PRINTERS' HOME.

An Interesting Letter from a Recent Visitor to that Institution.

DENVER, COLO., April 3, 1903.

On Thursday, March 27, 1903, accompanied by my wife, we left Denver for a trip to Colorado Springs, Colorado City, Manitou, and the Garden of the Gods. Arriving at Colorado Springs at 11:30 a. m., we boarded a car for the Home, where we were pleasantly received by Superintendent Deacon and invited to join the family at dinner. Of course, it was strange how a hungry person should arrive at this hour—but one's appetite never fails in this section. After a pleasant visit following the noonday meal we were joined by our friend, Carlos B. Tomlin, who had come over a different route to the city, and Mr. and Mrs. Deacon proceeded to conduct us through the buildings and grounds.

First of all I wish to say that the superintendent, Mr. Charles Deacon, and wife know well the meaning of the word hospitality, and being attached to this noble haven for the comfort and rest of union printers, ill and incapacitated for duty, take great pleasure in showing the visitors, be they printers or critics, through the place. This makes the visitor feel at home and as if he or she were welcome.

We called on the Washington contingent. In the library and reading room of the main building we met Jimmy F. McGill, Shad Campbell, Jack Robinson, and Otho Doughty. Then going over to the hospital annex we saw Charley Smith and Jimmy Fitzgerald, both of whom, by the way, looked quite well, the latter showing great improvement. All seemed much pleased with their treatment and surroundings.

The Home is situated about a mile outside of Colorado Springs, a city of about 25,000, and is easily reached by electric street cars. Located upon a prominence facing the west for about thirty miles to the north from Castle Rock to the Spanish Peaks, reputed to be about eighty miles south, the eye can feast upon nature's handiwork. Pike's Peak is about the first object that strikes the visitor in the scenery line. The grounds contain beautiful lawns, maple and elm trees, and shrubs, and during the spring and summer flowers enliven and add cheer to the scene.

The main building is 144 feet long by 44 feet wide, with a 20-foot by 40-foot wing to the rear of the north end. On the first and second stories, porches extend from the wing to the south end of the building. The building is constructed of white lava stone with red sandstone trimmings. Each floor has a central hall the entire length of the building into which all the rooms open. Above the portico is the inscription, "Union Printers' Home." Natural white pine is the material used for the inside finish, save the stairway, which is white oak. Herein are some sixty rooms, the dining room, cold storage room, kitchen, pantries, closets, etc., occupying the basement floor.

There are several rooms maintained by local unions and private citizens, such as the St. Louis, Chicago, San Francisco, and Denver rooms, Childs parlors, Drexel Memorial parlors, Ledyard Memorial room, and the Jefferson Davis room.

The hospital, to the south of the main building, covering an area of 90 by 50 feet, originally was a two-story building, but another story has just been completed adding seventeen private rooms. The first floor is taken up with dining room, kitchen, reading room, lavatory, coat closets, and fourteen private rooms; the second floor contains fourteen private rooms, drug room, nurses' quarters with private bath, lavatory, coat closets, etc. For the benefit of the sick, roomy porches are about the building so they may enjoy the summer sunshine, also large glass-enclosed porches have been erected for winter use. Steam is used for heating the buildings. A white enameled iron bed, hair mattress, oak dresser, easy chair, plain chair, rug upon an oiled hardwood floor, dark green shades, and white sash curtains constitute the furnishings of a private room in this building.

There is a laundry and heating plant 30 by 59 feet; this building is equipped with all the latest improved appliances.

The library contains upwards of 2,000 volumes, donated mostly by employing printers. Here are found many of the standard magazines, weekly papers, and dailies from nearly every city in the country.

The superintendent and his family are provided with a furnished, modern, six-room, steam-heated, and electric-lighted cottage, located a short distance from the main building. The architecture is in keeping with the surrounding buildings, lava stone being used for its construction.

In order to enter these grounds one passes through a magnificent stone arch gateway, bearing the inscription in gilded letters: "Union Printers' Home—Erected and Maintained by the International Typographical Union." Over the side arches is placed the date of erection of the Home—A. D. 1891. This gateway is 12 feet 9 inches wide by 13 feet 4 inches high, for carriages, with an arch on each side 5 feet wide by 8 feet high, for pedestrains. Between the arches for vehicles and pedestrians there are heavy piers 3 feet 9 inches square and 19 feet 6 inches high.

The cost of construction of the Home, exclusive of the recent addition to the hospital, was $99,585.71, as follows: Building and furnishing main edifice, $70,114 44; building and furnishing hospital annex, $13,829.72; building and furnishing superintendent's cottage, $3,400; building laundry and machinery for same, etc., $12,241.55. Add to this the value of the 80 acres of land (which was donated), the live stock, etc., and you have about the value of this grand institution.

As much has been said and written about this grandest of institutions, which fully illustrates the brotherhood of man, wherein religion, politics, or ancestry enter not, I will only refer to some of the facts and figures jotted down while there.

From the system of bookkeeping employed, the methods and discipline maintained, it is patent the Home is under the management of a good, reliable business man as well as a humanitarian—which is attested by words of the residents therein—and is, therefore, in safe keeping.

The short-coming of our craft, I believe, lies in not giving this noble institution greater mention and setting at rest many false impressions that it is conducted upon the plans of soldiers' homes, penal institutions, or any similar public or private institution. While herein there is a certain amount of discipline to be observed, the residents are as free as at large, going when they please and returning at a certain hour; in fact, only one thing is expected of the sojourner—and that is he must be a gentleman.

The food furnished is plain, wholesome, pure, and substantial, and the daily change of the same makes it far superior to some restaurants and many boarding houses. Of course the residents of the hospitals have more delicate food, such as jellies, broths, the freshest of eggs, and the purest of milk, as on this place are a large hennery and some twenty milch cows of the finest Jersey breed. Also here is raised the pork for the use of the Home. Just to give you an idea of the food consumed, will state about 1,200 pounds of flour, 150 pounds of coffee, 900 pounds of sugar, and all other food stuffs, such as cereals, potatoes, canned corn, beans, tomatoes, etc., are used in proportion monthly. Forty gallons of milk are used daily, much of which is drank by the invalids.

The Union Printers' Home should be enlarged to twice its present capacity and many more worthy printers furnished quarters therein, and the idea that this is a charitable institution should be dismissed from the thoughts of every printer who carries a union card, and a feeling that it is his home, if need be, take an uppermost berth in his mind.

At last my fondest wish of many years has been gratified and my expectations more than realized—a visit to the Union Printers' Home, at Colorado Springs.

An Interesting Letter.

John D. Coiner, formerly an employee of the Government Printing Office, well known to most of the members of Columbia Typographical Union, is temporarily a resident of the Soldiers' Home, at Dayton, Ohio. In a letter to a friend in this city, he says:

I am now a fixture in the Home, but have no idea of remaining here longer than December. * * The Central Home is one of the most beautiful places that can be found. It is located about three miles from Dayton. Three trolley lines run to this place. No trouble to get to town and back every five minutes of the day. There are over 6,000 inmates on the rolls, but about 800 are on furlough. A large number are very old, consequently there are many deaths. In March over forty were buried here. One or two funerals occur daily. The hospital, a large and beautiful structure, is all the time full. The buildings are mostly red brick, invariably three stories high, and made as attractive as possible. The barracks are on well macadamized streets. The walks are paved with asphalt, with plenty of room. The quartermaster's building is a whole block in length and a quarter of a block wide, red brick, built like a mosque, with spires and domes—the prettiest building in the place. We have two churches—Catholic and Protestant, and a small theater, about as large as the Academy. We have a beer hall, which is well patronized. I was told that $80,000 worth of beer was sold to inmates last year. We have a billiard hall with reading room attached, bowling alleys, library, store, newstand, post-office, and hotel. The officers—Governor, etc.—have nice Gothic-built buildings on the outskirts of the quarters. This place is very picturesque, with its two lakes, springs, nooks, and greenhouses, swans in the lakes, and deer and elk in the deer park. I am told that thousands of people come here in summer sightseeing.

SEASONABLE TOPICS.

The trees with leaves their limbs conceal,
As Nature hath provided,
And hence reveal no more the real
Since Winter thus is chided.

No more the coal man hugs his coal
Nor fixes price to suit him,
While we, half mad, accept the dole
And dare not once dispute him.

BUILDING TRADES COUNCIL.

The Regular Weekly Meeting Held at Proposed New Quarters.

The Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union met at 719 Sixth street northwest at the appointed hour. In the absence of the Chairman, Vice-Chairman, and Secretary, the meeting was called to order by Delegate McClelland. George A. Malone, of the Electrical Workers, was called to the chair, Delegate E. M. Van Ness being made secretary, but yielded at this point to Secretary Ratigan who then appeared.

Minutes of previous meeting were read and, upon correction, were approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Credentials were received from the Wood, Wire, and Metal Lathers' Local Union No. 9, certifying to M. Baden, vice E. W. Borst.

The Sergeant-at-Arms announced that a delegation from the International Union of Building Laborers were in the anteroom and would like to sit through the meeting. The delegates were welcomed by Chairman Malone. The delegates stated that they were affiliated with Building Trades Sections in the cities from which they came, and that no union was allowed representation in their Section who was not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From the R. A. Lanis Association of Steam Fitters, stating that they would take a hall in proposed new building, on second floor, for every Thursday night.

From Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, stating that they had declared J. H. McGill unfair, and asking the indorsement of the Council. Referred to Executive Committee.

From Local Union No. 77, Steam Engineers, inclosing list of fair employers. Referred to Executive Committee.

From Speedy Outlet Company, asking for directory of unions. Granted.

From Machinists, inclosing trade rights claimed by them.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

From Central Labor Union Committee, stating that Plumbers had been admitted against protest of the Council.

The Entertainment Committee stated that they would give an entertainment and ball, and asked authority to go ahead. Accepted and Secretary instructed to ask indorsement of Central Labor Union.

The Executive Committee reported that the Hod Carriers' case against the George A. Fuller Company was just and that the matter had been placed in hands of the Business Agent.

The Finance Committee reported having examined the accounts of the Secretary-Treasurer and reported that the books were correct, and that receipts from the sale of cards did not meet the expenses of the Council by $21.63. Report received and ordered filed.

The Business Agent made a report of work covered by him during week, which was accepted, and his salary ordered paid.

ROLL CALL.

Stone Laborers asked about the Stoneleigh Court and St. Elizabeth's Asylum jobs.

Carpenters called attention to Wildwood resort.

Lathers stated that they had deserters in their ranks, but were getting along without them.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The Secretary was instructed to write to the Central Labor Union and ask that body to enforce the constitution relative to all building trades unions in the Central Labor Union who were not affiliated with this Section.

Death of Albert W. McGill.

Albert W. McGill, well known as a printer in this and other cities of the country, died at Pittsburg last week of pneumonia. Mr. McGill came of a family of printers, this city being his home, two brothers, James F. and William McGill, and a sister, Mary C. McGill, a teacher in the public schools of this city, surviving him. He was buried at Pittsburg.

What Is "Scabbing?"

The strike of over nine thousand Brotherhood Carpenters in Greater New York was heralded as a complete success from the standpoint of the Brotherhood in having all their members respond to the call. But it appears that another force is to be reckoned with in the trade. The so-called Amalgamated Carpenters have stepped in and are endeavoring to fill the places of the Brotherhood men as fast as they can be brought to New York, this city having furnished its quota to that end. It is about time to call a halt on the throat-cutting policy of rump organizations, who thrive at the expense of their fellow-workers. The Amalgamated Carpenters are affiliated with the A. F. of L., as is also the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners. Some one has erred, and it is apparent that no real good can be accomplished by one organization "scabbing" on another. To put it mildly, a bona fide real "scab" is far better than the one who does the trick as a member of a union. The next meeting of the Executive Council of the A. F. of L., which will be held at Toronto, Canada, will no doubt take cognizance of the matter.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

A friend tells me one of his earliest experiences "on the road," which will appeal to all who have ever "been there." "In the latter part of December, 1886," said he, "I found myself, accompanied by a wandering cigarmaker, in the little town of Taylor, Tex., the southern terminus of the M., K. and T. Evening was coming on, we were tired, and I was a homesick kid a thousand miles from home, dead broke. By chance it happened that about forty other tourists from the four quarters of the earth dropped into the railroad yards there that evening, and with the little town already worked to death and the crowd large and hungry, the prospects for supper looked dubious, and I already feared to draw a long breath least I go up like a balloon, a la Elijah. In this predicament an organizing genius came to the front and suggested that we work the town systematically and afterwards meet in the railroad yards and divide up. Accordingly we were all apportioned to certain lines. I was detailed to panhandle a butcher shop near by; but, as I was a tenderfoot, the leader sent a man along to see that I didn't flunk. I went into the butcher shop and my overseer remained outside. The butcher was waiting on a lady and I could not ask him for charity before her; so after she was served and went out, I, having noticed that he had no bologna sausage in stock, asked him:

"'Have you any bologna?'

"'No,' said he, shaking his head, which the watching hobo observed, whereupon I went out after expressing my regret.

"'What did he say?' asked my guardian angel.

"'He said he had nothing for tramps,' said I.

"'Well, I'll report you game all right,' said my pard. 'Now, you hustle and I'll try a new tack.'

"He proved a seasoned veteran, and soon had an armful of plunder, which he divided with me, and for which I received great credit when we made our return.

"We built a fire of old ties and soon had meat broiling on the coals, coffee boiling in tin cans, and canned vegetables heating in their original vessels. The supply was bountiful, the fire cheering, the ruddy faces shining against the background of darkness, and such a feast as we had! Belshazzar's feast wasn't in it. With quips and jests and merry sayings and retorts, we filled and warmed ourselves. It reminded one of the Scriptural loaves and fishes or the wedding feast at Cana, only we were shy on wine.

"In an hour it was past; several freight trains had borne most of the feasters away to the four quarters again and out into their unknown future, 'as ships that pass in the night;' but to one at least this banquet was embalmed forever as a pleasant, fragrant memory."

I received a letter recently from my old friend, Ez Lewis, at the Printers' Home, which is full of things interesting to me, and may be to others. It is about thirty years since I knew Ez at St. Joe, Mo., and he writes me that since that time he oscillated between Cincinnati and St. Louis, Memphis and Chicago, putting in the last ten years at Indianapolis, whence he was sent to the Home, an institution with which he is delighted, recent improvements making the Home and grounds "just grand." He tells me that Ferd Schlegel, Wylie Brazzleton, Mike Lawlor (one of the first men I ever knew when I broke loose from my apprentice moorings, and who still lingers in memory as one of the finest), Lon Hardman, and Joseph S. Browne are still at work in St. Joe, and that Cy Bowman is at La Veta, Colo. He rooms with my old friend John McKillop, of Boston, one of God's good fellows, and occasionally makes a visit to the tombs of George Washington Lutes, Battenberg, and Dick Pugh in the Home cemetery. Capt. H. P. McCloon, another old St. Joe man at the Home, has been kept indoors for some time by his kidney trouble. I am sure if those of my readers who have friends at the Home knew how much the old fellows there appreciate letters from the outside world, they would be willing to devote some of their spare time toward brightening their existence.

By the kindness of E. S. ("Pucky") Wild, of the Night Force, I am in receipt of "Not Then, But Now," a song for the middle voice, the words of which are by our own James Lacoste Rodier and the music by the talented wife of Mr. Wild, Mrs. B. Noble Wild. The poetry is in Rodier's best vein, and he has written many things that deserve to live, and Mrs. Wild has caught the spirit of the words and set them to a beautiful air that should prove popular, with an accompaniment that is a refreshing change from the customary mechanical counterpoint hackneyisms. John F. Ellis & Co. are the publishers, and that this firm handles it is a guaranty of the merit of the composition. Mrs. Wild has composed much music that has proved popular, and all her work is appreciated by those whose minds are above the rag-time standard.

* * * *

It is with genuine pleasure that I give space to the candidacy of John R. Purvis, of the Night Bill Force, for delegate. He has been a member of this union for about ten years, had quite a little experience in various parts of the country before his arrival, and has been a useful and willing member, both as a committeeman and as an entertainer, since coming here. He has a large acquaintance throughout the union and is personally popular, and there is not in the field a candidate who would be a more creditable representative of Columbia Union in this her convention year.

The labor organizations are pushing the boom for Waudby for Commissioner of Labor all over the country and seem in earnest in demanding the office for a representative of their own class as a just right. His long connection with the office and his years of study of industrial problems peculiarly fit him for the place, and there is a strong feeling that the Commissioner of Labor should be a man in active sympathy with the desires and needs of those who toil, as other positions are filled by men whose education and tastes have fitted them for their peculiar duties. Mr. Waudby, as an exponent of the workingman's views, has the indorsement of unionists in all crafts, and upon them he relies, more than on the political influence that comes from active work in behalf of one or the other of the great parties, though he has always been a Republican. The appointment will probably not be made for several months—time enough for the labor world to express its views and to choose its representative, and so far Mr. Waudby's is the only name I have heard in that connection.

William Dickson, known generally by printers and newspaper men and himself a printer in his youthful days, died last Thursday and was buried on Monday from St. Patrick's Church. Though his associations were largely with those who make newspapers, I do not know that he was ever connected with printing in this city except that about twenty years ago he published a city directory. At one time he was the manager of the Pabst Brewing Company in this city. He was an ardent Democrat and at the two inaugurations of Cleveland he was grand marshal. He came here from Philadelphia during the war to organize the fire department, and from that drifted into other businesses. He was an agreeable companion, with an inexhaustible fund of stories which he told with rare skill.

Among the committeemen in charge of the Odd Fellows' Fair now going on at Odd Fellows' Hall I observe the names of Capt. D. V. Chisholm (two committees), Maj. R. A. McLean, E. C. The "Kid" was quite a traveler, but occasionally visited Washington.

A little man who is busy discussing the action of one of the candidates for delegates in claiming and receiving pay for lost time while doing work for the union surely forgets that as a member of the same committee he himself refused and failed to do any work whatever, either on his own time or otherwise. Let us have a clean campaign. If we can't say anything good of a man, let's keep our slammed snaggle-fanged mouths shut.

Wilson Clark is working great bluffs on his Baltimore friends these days. The lapels of his coat are considerably worn and the buttons are loosening up, but he holds fast.

Harry Figg has moved again. It is rumored that he is looking over all the boarding houses in Washington with a view to making suggestions for the Bookbinders' Home.

The big elephant known as the Bookbinders' Home was laid on the table at the last meeting. This is a very poor foundation for the new home. What say you, Brother Burke?

Timmy McKenna's dog ate 'Gene Patsch's hat the other evening. The animal had been a particularly healthful one heretofore, but he has been sick ever since. 'Gene is also sick, though he doesn't show it in the same way.

It is rich to listen to the idle prattle of clerks in the Departments about the cost of work done in the G. P. O.—men who know nothing about press-work, printing, or binding. Men who do not know cow hide from morocco or a straw board from a tar board. These wise guys know it all. The money to do the printing and binding is appropriated by an act of Congress and comes from the same treasury the clerk's salary is paid from. The Government Printing Office was built to do the Government printing and binding and it is a positive violation of law to do it elsewhere. If you have been reading the papers of late you will see where the contractors for Government work and supplies are accusing each other of selling the United States Government inferior goods. This would be the case if the printing and binding were given to outside firms. Fair wages and first-class work should be the motto of the Government at all times.

The ponies have gone.

Union meeting Sunday.

The next attraction is baseball.

M. M. ("Milt") Smith was a visitor in the city from Richmond, Va., where he is now located.

Tommy Dougherty spent last Sunday in Baltimore. Bill Leeper sent his regards to all his brothers.

Samuel R. Yost, well known in New York City and this city, died in New York on Thursday last. He was at one time employed on the Post in this city, and for some time past has been in New York City, where he was employed as an operator on the Tribune. Prior to going to New York he worked in Boston for several years. His remains were sent to his old home, Staunton, Va., interment being at Thornrose Cemetery, the funeral being largely attended by friends of the deceased.

First Division.

Capt. J. Ligon King is off suffering from an attack of "herpes zoster." If Joe was not working on the S.-G. Cat. it would be shingles.

How would you like to meet this word in a spelling match? "Methyltrihydrooxychinolincarbonsaure." It happened on the S.-G. Catalogue last week.

There will be a great bowling contest between the Second and Third divisions, on Friday night, at the Rathskeller. Everybody is invited to be present.

The tailors of this city are striking for recognition of their union. How would it do to inform the gentleman who builds your spring garments that you require a union label thereon? May be he would put it on. Who knows? Try it.

In my last week's notes, in speaking about a chairman not carrying around a subscription list, I did not refer to the chairman of this division, as Chairman Mabrey is one of the most obliging and hard-working chairmen that this or any other division ever had.

A New York firm is sending out another circular stating how to get rich quick. Quite a number of the boys of this division received one telling them to send for a circular to find out why the St. Louis firm failed. They must think we are easy, but still I must admit such has been the case heretofore.

The First Division baseball team will be organized the first part of next week. The following players have been signed for the coming season: Messrs. Bodenhamer, King, Nachman, Miller (Bob), Plummer, Mayers, Moyer, Vogt, Martin, and Mullen. Anyone wishing to join the club will please send his name to Mr. Plummer.

The ponies came and went away,
And pay day fell the very first day;
For the next two months there'll be h—l to play;
Who is to blame—the "Booky" or Jay?

In the spring the bloated coal man
Gets him ready to retire;
In the spring the foxy ice man
Sends the price of ice up higher.
In the spring comes balmy breezes
Which our grateful senses greet;
In the spring the weather changes
And it snows about our feet.
In the spring the frisky ponies
Gallop gaily 'round the track;
In the spring we put up our dollars
And get tens and twenties back.
In the spring come bock beer pictures
Of the giddy girl and goat;
In the spring we'll go to Fulton's
With our winter overcoat.

CLOTILDE.

Last Opportunity This Week
to buy lots in the heart of Hyattsville (Schley avenue), 30x150, for $10 down and $5 each pay day. Price, $300. No interest nor taxes. Only seven left. AUGUST DONATH, 1328 Eighth street northwest.

Oyster pan roast, 10c. R. A. Driscoll's N. Cap. and G sts. Overholt whisky, 10c.

Second Division.

Sullivan has gone on leave for 15 days.

It looks like Dan Vaughan, as sure as you are born.

John Delahunty is enjoying the balance of his leave. He will be off 13 days.

President Johnson is a "sure thing" this time—a regular 1 to 200 shot, to use a horsey expression.

Now that the horse races are over the interest in the race for delegate will begin to get quite lively. May the best men win.

Our old friend, Dave Snyder, chairman of the Third, has developed into a rather strenuous bird—at least so we have heard.

We understand Harry O'Donnell, who made such a good ran last year, is a candidate again. Let us hope he will win out this time, as he is a good union man, as well as a gentleman and scholar, and will be an honor to our organization. We wish we had more like him.

The second series of games between the Second and Third division bowling teams came off last Friday night at the Rathskeller. The Third Division team thought they had a good thing this time, but before the third game was over they were led to realize that they had another think coming. Cheer up, boys, it might have been worse. Lack of space prevents us from giving the score, and consequently the boys of the Third should not feel so sore.

"Pard" Bloomer, the genial writer of "Flotsam and Jetsam," whatever that may mean, has a good word to say for several of the prospective candidates, and we hope we will not be called conceited when we say that we have the Brightest and Best candidate in the bunch in this division. To those of the older members of our organization it is unnecessary to say a word in regard to the Merits of the candidate from this division, but as there are quite a number of new men who have not had the pleasure of the acquaintance of our genial vice president, to those we desire to say that they will make no mistake by casting a vote for Edgar B. Meritt. Mr. Meritt is well named. He is a gentleman and a scholar. He is what one may call a self-made man in the broadest sense of the word. Any man who works eight hours per day and studies four or five hours per night in order to get a good education certainly deserves to win in the great battle of life. Mr. Meritt has always been a good union man, and always filled with honor and distinction every office or trust committed to him, and if elected, and we feel confident that he will be, will reflect credit on our organization. We wish we had more men like him in our union. Meritt must win in the delegate race, as in all other races.

The "Man's Store"
Suits worth $18.50
$15

The whole story is told in a few words—good fabrics—good colorings—good tailoring—good looks—and good wear. All this and more applies especially to that surpassing line of Spring Suits at $15—the "Pride of the Man's Store." All the new models in single and double breasted sacks—splendid fabrics as honest in quality as they are handsome in appearance—Suits that would be generous values at $18.50 —our special offering at $15

Fifth Division.

P. M. McCallum is taking a vacation.

W. M. Hamilton returned to work Monday after a week's sickness.

Ed Nash came down from the Spess and is now end man on the east side of the last alley.

E. F. Geyer was called to his home in Indiana on account of the serious illness of his father.

J. C. Himmelman has returned from his leave, and says Pittsburg looks just like the last time he saw it, as far as he could tell.

There being a dearth of news, Eddie Heidingsfeld and L. D. Weeks consented to shave their mustaches to give the correspondent an item.

Stephen Th. Westdall is on leave. Mr. Westdall is a steady worker and a close student. This year he is completing a post-graduate course at law.

Cards announcing candidates are beginning to decorate our cases. Harry O'Donnell came first, closely followed by Joseph Stelle. Next week the work will begin in earnest.

The G. P. O. Immediate Relief Association has completed its organization and is ready for membership. This society should obviate the necessity of circulating a petition at the death of a printer for the relief of his family. The expense is light and there is no medical examination.

RAN.

Oyster pan roast, 10c. R. A. Driscoll's, N. Cap. and G sts. Overholt whisky, 10c.

Treasury Division.

F. E. Williamson is taking the remainder of his leave.

Edward Z. Fisher, our timekeeper and reviser, took several days' leave last week.

Joseph H. Byrnes, pressman, who has been on a month's leave, returned to work this week.

The races are over, but the results are not very encouraging, so far as this division is concerned.

Mrs. Annie R. Jewett, who was sick for six or eight weeks, has sufficiently recovered to return to work.

The candidates for office are slow coming around, only one having made his appearance in this division so far.

George Griffith, Alfred K. Mundheim, and C. C. Semmes, each took several days' leave during the past week.

Miss Annie F. Leonard, one of our popular pressfeeders, spent Easter with friends in Philadelphia. She reports a jolly good time.

The bonds have been running this month, and the following compositors were transferred here from the Sixth Division to help us out: Eugene F. Smith, Daniel McFadden, Harry E. Giles, and E. N. Bunker.

The Atlanta Lockout.

Atlanta Typographical Union has sent out a circular letter calling attention to the trouble in that city in the book and job offices. Atlanta was thoroughly unionized three years ago, and the present trouble was brought about by the refusal of Atlanta Union, at the behest of employing printers, to call its men out of an office where the proprietor had refused to pay a fine to the employers' organization for alleged violation of rules of the association in securing work that should, under their rules, go to the first bidder. Foote & Davis started out by locking its union men out, and the Piedmont Printing Company, having taken up work that Foote & Davies could not handle, the union called its men out of that office. This was followed by a general lockout on the part of the employers, involving 140 compositors and 3 stereotypers. In all twelve offices are involved, as follows: Foote & Davies, Piedmont Printing Company, Franklin, Byrd, La Hatte, Syl. Lester, Bennett, Bean, Mutual Printing Company, Atlanta Typesetting Company, Tompkins & McCown, and the Lithograph and Printing Company.

The employers are making effort to man their offices, but are having a hard time to fill them up. They declare they will run nonunion offices if it means the annihilation of the local union and the I. T. U. Circulars and advertisements have been sent out claiming that the offices are "open," with the intention to mislead union men.

The officers of Atlanta Union and Organizer Houston claim they will win and ask for moral aid from all sister unions.

Personal Mention.

James Wood, Second Vice-President and general organizer of the Cigarmakers' International Union, was in the city this week. He is recovering from the attempt to assassinate him at Palatka, Fla., some weeks ago. His account of the assault shows how cheap life is held in some sections of the country, as there is no doubt the two men who tried to kill him were hired by parties interested in having Mr. Wood out of the way. The Tobacco Trust has been waging a bitter war on the cigarmakers in Florida who are members of the Union and frequent anonymous threats has failed to deter the organizers in surrendering the field to the trust. Mr. Wood was wounded in the side and another shot, which would undoubtedly have proved fatal, struck his watch and thus saved his life. He has the bullet imbedded in the watch as a reminder of the exciting incident.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

I've been "lookin' 'em over"—doing the vidette act, as it were, preparatory to the International entry next Sunday. I consulted one oracle; asked who So-and-so was supporting, "Why," was the reply, "Purvis, of course. And," he added, "he's the finest weather gauge in this Union. He never gets on a dead one!" Such being the case, gentlemen, get on the Purvis band wagon.

Brother Babcock is one of them "blank literary fellers," but withal eminently equipped for the position. Among other good deeds that can be laid at his door is the founding of Columbia Union Debating Society. He is well informed, a ready debater, and about the only material which can be raked up to "knock" on the gentleman in his proneness to the use of the cap I.

Mr. O'Donnell had the distinction of falling just outside the breastworks on a prior occasion and hopes to do better if given another chance.

Very favorable comment is passed upon the entry from the vice-presidential stable, Mr. Meritt.

Mr. Stelle is a Washington boy, possessing a local acquaintance valuable at this juncture, and if the claims of his constituents count for anything, has already landed a winner.

Messrs. Stretton and Fitzwilliam will endeavor to corall the "good fellow" vote, while Brother Onyun will add a flavor of merriment to the campaign. As to down town, this is, I believe, conceded to be Mr. Rodier's year.

H. S. SUTTON.

The Baseball Season.

The baseball season opens in this city with the New Yorks. Manager Loftus is sanguine that the team this year will far surpass the stride it made last year for recognition among the leaders.

With Delahanty, De Montreville, Ryan, and a team that will line up with the best in the league, good clean sport may be anticipated.

Captain De Montreville has been getting good results from the team in the preliminary work so far and promises to show the local "fans" some fast team work when they get into schedule playing.

A VIGOROUS REPLY.

President Gompers Makes a Statement in Reply to President Parry.

The report of President Parry, of the Manufacturers' Association, made during the convention of that organization at New Orleans recently, has called forth a clear cut statement from President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, in reply to that portion of Mr. Parry's report that dealt with the question of organized labor. Mr. Gompers' statement is as follows:

D. M. Parry, President of the Manufacturers' Association, has delivered his annual "report" to the Manufacturers' Association, at New Orleans, April 14. It consists of sixty-four pages, forty-seven of which are devoted exclusively to a tirade of abuse of organized labor and attacks upon its officers and advocates.

If there were any doubt that Mr. Parry had taken leave of his reason, the report (or rather harrangue) which he has made to his convention demonstrates it beyond any doubt. If the Manufacturers' Association at its convention at New Orleans indorses Mr. Parry's unjustified, undigested, and malicious antagonism to the effort of the workers to secure material and moral improvement, it simply writes itself down to his low level and stands committed with him for all the injury which must follow from his rabid utterances, his venomous and ignorant antagonism, which must provoke only resentment and retaliation.

Organized labor is the result of our industrial development and environment. It proposes to secure a larger share of the production of wealth. It seeks to secure these objects by peaceful and lawful methods. It aims to establish more rightful relations between man and man.

Organized labor is here to stay—yes, to stay long after Mr. Parry's name shall have been forgotten. It has survived many encounters with men of the Parry caliber.

Organized labor seeks no conflict such as Mr. Parry would promote, nor will it run away from it. We desire industrial and social peace and are making for it, Mr. Parry and those who act with him to the contrary notwithstanding.

We shall be enabled soon to discern to what extent the manufacturers of the United States are in accord with him. At this writing we are confident that he represents but an infinitesimal part of the American employers.

Organized labor faces the future, confident and self-reliant, and hurls back into the teeth of Mr. Parry his foul vituperation and abuse. Organized labor is constantly striving for the attainment of a better and higher life, the fulfillment of its mission for the brotherhood of man.

MEETING OF COLUMBIA UNION

Nomination Sunday Brings Out Only an Average Attendance.

THE ORATORS HAVE AN INNING

No Opposition to Re-election of the Present Executive Officers—Grievance Committee Reports—Appeal of Times Chapel to Be Contested—Nominations—A Short, Exciting, and Business-like Meeting.

The regular meeting of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, was called to order at 2:30 p. m. last Sunday, President Johnson being in the chair, and Secretary Garrett being in his accustomed place. The attendance was fair, but not up to the usual standard on nomination Sunday. The day being pleasant, quite a number remained outdoors in preference to being present to listen to the flow of oratory that ushered in the election campaign of No. 101.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read to a point where the usual motion to suspend further reading was entertained and carried.

Cards deposited since last meeting were read and duly received.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Nominations Committee reported favorably on applications of James M. Wallace, T. M. Weir, and Carroll Harbaugh, the last two gentlemen being proposed for apprentice membership. Report concurred in and the new apprentice members were obligated. An application of F. Hyer to be transferred to the passive roll, being favorably reported, was granted.

The secretary was directed to request Philadelphia Union to obligate J. M. Wallace, he being now a resident of that city.

At this point the sergeant-at-arms reported that a committee representing Grocery Clerks' Union were in the anteroom and desired an audience with the union. The union granting the request, the delegation made a brief address to the union, urging members of the union to refrain from patronizing the Emrich Beef Company's stores and to insist on the clerk in all stores members may deal in showing the Clerks' card. The president assured the delegation from the Grocery Clerks' Union that Columbia Union would take cognizance of their request.

The Printing Committee made a further report from the Yearbook and stated that a final report would be made as soon as possible.

The Grievance Committee made a report on various matters before them, stating that the grievance against Jas. P. McGrann, 1704 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, has been settled. Also recommend that John Coleman, horseshoer, 1301 Thirty-sixth street northwest, having failed to settle differences with Horseshoers' Union, be placed on unfair list; that John S. Farrell, Second and G streets northwest, having failed to satisfy the claims of Grocery Clerks' Union, recommend that he be declared unfair. The committee asked further time on grievance of R. A. Lanis Association of Steam Fitters, No. 10, and the Yale Launday, and on grievance of Theatrical Stage Alliance Employees against the Academy of Music. Report received and recommendations concurred in.

The Business Committee submitted a report on a request from the Record chapel as to charge on certain matter set in that chapel. The committee's decision that the matter should be charged one-half advance was concurred in by the union. Also, a request for a decision from the Fifth Division, G. P. O., on certain matter set in that chapel called forth the opinion of the committee that it should be measured double price, which was sustained by the union.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS.

President Johnson reported two deaths since last meeting, that of B. F. Cullen, on March 20, and Otis W. McKee, on April 3. He recommended that a committee be appointed, to be known as the Amos J. Cummings Memorial Committee, to devise ways and means for establishing a fund for the purpose of carrying out the recommendations of the I. T. U. Cummings Memorial Committee.

Mr. Rowe moved that a committee of five be appointed for that purpose, which was agreed to.

The president laid before the union the notification from the I. T. U. that the Washington Times chapel had appealed from the decision of the union in the matter of the refusal of the union to permit the interchange of matrices on Munsey papers.

Mr. Herzinger moved that the I. T. U. officers be notified that this union stands by its former action.

The president laid before the union the application of William F. Talbott, a member of this union, residing in Baltimore, for admission to the Home. A letter was read from Mr. Talbott regarding his condition. The officers of the union were directed to ask Baltimore Union to investigate the case for this union and our executive officers would then pass upon the case.

NOMINATIONS.

The nominations of officers for the ensuing year was then taken up. The various candidates were nominated by friends who desired to impress upon the members present that their nominees possessed all the qualifications necessary to fill the office for which he was presented. Metaphor and truism were freely injected into the addresses of the nominators, and all present were duly impressed with the efforts made by the gentlemen who addressed the union at this stage of the proceedings:

"The Western Laborer."

The Easter number of the Western Laborer was received among our exchanges with considerable gratification. It was a number that our esteemed cotemporary, "Sadie Maguire," might well feel proud of, being produced under the sole management of the Woman's Auxiliary of Omaha Union, No. 190. The articles were well written and timely, while the mechanical execution was all that could be desired. It brings out again in strong relief the fact that there is considerable latent talent among the helpmates and immediate members of the family of our craftsmen, and when the day comes when we must step aside for the "new woman" let us hope that the inspiration shown by the Women's Auxiliary of Omaha may be emulated by our successors.

Miss Templeton's Latest.

New York Journal.]

Miss Fay Templeton is convulsing her friends with a story which is quite new to the rose-bordered Rialto.

The hero of the yarn is the man who is always a highly colored picture of hard luck.

"Say," he drawled, when telling the Weberfields actress how dismal fate dogged his reluctant footsteps, "the unluckiest beggar in the world is named Me. Unlucky? I'm so unlucky that if I was Lazarus dead in the tomb, and the voice of the Lord cried, 'Brother Lazarus, come forth!' I'd come fifth. That's how unlucky I am."

CONGRESSIONAL APPROVAL

Of William S. Waudby for Commissioner of Labor.

STATESMEN FOR WORKINGMAN

Senator Depew, of New York, Congressmen W. O. Smith, of Pennsylvania, and J. B. Perkins, of New York, for Waudby—"Pioneer Advocate of Bureau of Labor"—"Will Make an Appeal to the President."

We are in receipt of the following from Hon. W. O. Smith, Representative of the Twenty-seventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, an old friend and long-time acquaintance of William S. Waudby:

PUNXSUTAWNEY, PA., April 17, 1903.

EDITOR THE TRADES UNIONIST:

I note with much gratification that my old friend, William S. Waudby, is being put forward by labor organizations all over the country as the logical successor of Hon. Carroll D. Wright as Commissioner of Labor. Mr. Waudby was one of the pioneer advocates of a National Bureau of Labor, and has always been a sincere and helpful partisan in the cause of the moral, intellectual, and material uplifting of the toilers of the earth. He was virtually one of the founders of the Department of Labor, and, having been connected with it from the very beginning as a collector of statistics, is thoroughly familiar with its duties. His comprehensive knowledge of labor conditions all over the world, together with his well-known zeal in the cause, renders him specially competent to make the work of this branch of the Government practical and of genuine service to the nation and to mankind.

Mr. Waudby, being a graduate of the same institution in which Ben Franklin received his education—the printing office—and having taken a post-graduate course in the "correcting alley" of the G. P. O., a veritable nursery of genius and philosophy, the great Fraternity of the Stick and Rule everywhere would regard his promotion to the place of Commissioner of Labor as a personal vindication and would feel that it had raised the credit of every individual member of the craft.

But Mr. Waudby is not only the choice of the union printers of the United States for this important place, but of organized labor in general, which recognizes in him an able and conscientious apostle of the brotherhood of man. By making this appointment President Roosevelt would at once earn the gratitude of the organized labor of America and secure an efficient and faithful coadjutor.

W. O. SMITH.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

My paragraph last week about Capt. Ez Lewis, now at the Printers' Home, reminded Johnny ("Kid") Huston of an incident which occurred at Indianapolis some years ago. By the way, in referring to Huston, Lewis asked in his recent letter to me "if the Kid still goes fishing."

According to Huston, he procured some bait, and, having the necessary tackle, he went one day to Broad Ripple, a short distance out of Indianapolis, and tried his luck. After fishing awhile and catching only a few small ones, he fell in with Cap. Lewis and a friend, who had half a dozen good big fellows. No more fish being caught, the trio went back to the city, and Lewis and his friend deposited their catch in the ice box at a friendly saloon. After irrigating a time or two the Kid got ready to go home, and looking mournfully at his bunch of minnows, he said to Lewis:

"Say, you fellows ain't going to take all those big fish home with you, are you?"

"Why, no; I guess we have more than we need," said Ez. "Barkeep, get one of those big ones out for the Kid."

Johnny expressed his gratitude and went on home with his load (of fish) much augmented. He appreciated their generosity much more when he learned the next day that Lewis and his partner had bought the big fellows of a noted fish dealer before starting on their trip.

If a man was present at the union meeting last Sunday and heard the nominating speeches, how is he to make up his mind for whom to vote for the four delegates? After listening to the glowing words and really able speech of Mr. Waterman, of the Spess, I said to myself:

"Well, I'll vote for Meritt; that's sure!"

Then Mr. Henesy dwelt with such persuasive eloquence on the virtues of his candidate that I thought:

"Frank Stretton gets my vote to a certainty. I don't see how we have got along without him as long as we have."

The Billy Leavitt spoke, and again I thought:

"If I had not been an original O'Donnell man, I'd be the first to fly to his standard. Well, there are my three G. P. O. candidates any how."

Then Philip S. Steele spoke, and I began to worry:

"I just must vote for Joe Babcock. One of the other three must come off."

About this time Judge Tallman took the floor, and after he had ceased I began to realize what anguish is. In my agony I groaned:

"Somebody must make room for Fitzwilliam. I must, oh, I must—I will vote for Fitz!"

Then Frank Kidd poured forth his rounded sentences, and with Chicago River lucidity set forth his candidate's merits. Said I, growing reckless:

"Here's where I wipe off the slate. All Hades and Brown's mules couldn't hold me from voting for John Purvis!"

When McCardell arose and poured into my anguished but now reckless soul the great advantages and desirability of onions as an article of diet, for the union as well as for the individual, I smiled sardonically below my collar button and whispered to myself:

"I'll vote for Onyun if it takes the skin off. E pluribus Onyun! Magnum est Onyun et prevalebit!" And peel after peel of applause from my conscience greeted my judgment.

Then Jimmy Platt secured the president's eye and so far as the G. P. O. candidates were concerned their fates were sealed. I thought on this wise:

"Vote for Joe Stelle! Well, I should say yes! The boy that I first started on the downward road, and whose steady and regular deterioration I have watched as a hen watches her chickens—I will, I will, I will!"

Then, no more victims being offered for sacrifice on the G. P. O altar, President Johnson stated that he would receive nominations for the downtown delegate, and John Macksey spoke his piece. I reasoned thus:

"Rodier is my man! Nobody else will have the gall to stand against him, and if he had, Rodier's accomplishments and services so cleasly entitle him to preference that it will be like running against time for Cos."

But then Major Herbert came on, and again I was mixed. I thought:

"Lerch! Frank Lerch! Why, of course! The very man for the hour! Rodier can wait! He's used to it! Lerch it must be—Lerch it is!" At any rate, I'll have to consider him.

There were many brilliant seconding speeches, but seconds are secondary considerations. The nominating speeches are the ones that do the business.

Will the candidates kindly wait on me and present their claims? I shall try the case de novo and am still open to conviction and conversion. Come and see me—often if you can. I want to do the right thing, but just now I am a little muddled. Come and tell me why you should be elected, and I will vote for as many of you as I am convinced ought to be chosen—if I can.

The great, flourishing Government Printing Office Mutual Relief Association, now numbering about 1,000 members, was organized and originated by the efforts of William S. Waudby, now of Rochester, N. Y., then a compositor in the G. P. O., about twenty years ago. A success from its inception, it has steadily grown to its present splendid proportions, paying out in the neighborhood of $5,000 each year in sick benefits, at a cost of not more than 40 cents each per month to its members. So great have its advantages been that there are now four similar associations in the office. Entering the service of the Department of Labor, of which Mr. Waudby was probably more instrumental than any one else in securing the organization, about two years after the formation of the relief society, he has always been interested in its welfare. He is now the most probable successor of Hon. Carroll D. Wright as Commissioner of Labor, and has behind him the great body of organized labor, besides some influential political friends, who believe that the Commissionership of Labor should be in the hands of one who understands and appreciates the service that this bureau can and should be to the toiling world. As a student of labor problems, Mr. Waudby has written much on the various subjects connected with working men, women, and children, and his sympathies and education peculiarly fit him for the office.

Secretary Garrett received a few days ago a souvenir postal card from John W. ("Shad") Campbell, now at the Home, "with the respects of all of us." It represents a view of Colorado Springs, with Pike's Peak in the distance.

Except delegates there are no contests for any of the union offices except vice-president, for which Dan Vaughan and W. R. Abbott are the nominees. "Brer" Abbott is employed on the Night Bill Force and Vaughan in the Day Proof Room. You will make no mistake in voting for either of them, as they are both polished and capable sawed-off little gentlemen.

* * * *

Charlie Ennis gave the very satisfactory reason for accepting the nomination as alternate last Sunday that he likes to see his name in print. He is not unique in that—there are others.

* * * *

The nomination of Charles C. Thompson, of the Post, for trustee of the union by C. W. Otis, who declined a renomination, was received with enthusiastic applause, both as a tribute to Mr. Thompson and because of the tender of this responsible place to a downtown man.

* * * *

Every reader of the Post—and he who does not read and admire the Post neglects his opportunities and shows a vitiated taste—has learned with regret of the death of Mr. Harry L. Merrick, probably the most brilliant, fecund, and versatile newspaper paragrapher the world ever knew. Who has not read his iridescent scintillations and ground his teeth or felt a desire to shake hands with him, according as his pet hobbies and heroes or his betes noirs were macerated or lacerated by this prince of epigrammists, who could say more in four lines than most men can in a half column? Who did not read his paragraphs first of all when he turned to the Post's delightful editorial page? The race of paragraphers may not have perished with Mr. Merrick, but it will be long before his equal will be discovered.

* * * *

As a matter of convenience to my friends and myself and not solely from motives prompted by egotism, I desire to state that I do not now reside where I did before I removed. My present address is 512 Stanton place northeast, sometimes called C street by the vulgar, where the latchstring hangs out, and where carpet tacks and other things still lie around loose within. You will take due notice thereof and govern yourselves accordingly.

A very readable account of the organization and work of the Women's Auxiliary of Columbia Union was published in last Saturday's Star, embellished by well-executed portraits and brief sketches of Miss Laura B. Gordon, president, and Mrs. Nannie M. McMichael, secretary, who are most capable officers. This is a society to which every union printer's lady relatives should belong, and by means of which they can materially assist their wage-earning masculine kin in meeting the vicissitudes of life. Many ladies could there learn of how much assistance they can be in the carrying out of union principles, which in these more enlightened days largely consist of means other than strikes.

SANDWICHES AND RUN-DOWNS.

The 1903 Annual of the Union Mutual Relief Association will be out shortly.

Jim Brooke is again one of the forty-eighters, where he is no stranger, and is always a welcome comrade.

"Fountleroy" Roberts and "Kid" Maloney are two of the recruits in the last transfer to the "Spess." work.

The current issue will come pretty near being the top notcher both in number of patents issued and in size of the specifications.

Candidates for delegate are finding their way daily to the "Spess." Division, this being evidently considered a fruitful field in the harvest.

The race-meet at Bennings being a thing of the past, the dead-games are looking for good things in baseball now to relieve the monotony of life.

One of the recent recruits gives it as his firm conviction that there is enough of the strenuous in the life of a "Spess." comp. to satisfy most any ambition.

Overtime and plenty of it, and lack of copy and expected reductions, is the difference in condition between this division and those of the main office.

"Noodles" Conroy, of the Union Bindery, has joined the active order of hustlers for two that is erroneously reported to be much cheaper than one.

L. O. Knowles, of the "Sideshow," has been under treatment at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, for six weeks past, and but slight improvement is reported.

Col. Ed. Nash, having been transferred to more congenial employment at the main shop, the coterie of noon-hour dope sheet fiends are looking for a new chairman.

"Mord." Hyams, the galley-proof pressman, has been laid up for some time, having undergone an operation for some affliction in his face. He is improving and expects to be on duty shortly.

The Sunny Southland seems to have the call in the aspirants for delegate this year, General Purvis, Colonel Meritt, and Major Fitzwilliam having entered the race, not to mention Capt. Joe Stelle, of the District.

Two of the best pictures that have so far appeared in the labor column of the Evening Star were those of Miss Laura B. Gordon and Miss Nannie McMichael, respectively President and Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary of Columbia Union.

Additional interest is attached to the position of Sergeant-at Arms of the Union this year by the expectation that that officer will be selected for like duties for the International Convention, with consequent honors and emoluments.

It is to be hoped that a new dress of type will be put on the "Spess." work when the move is made to Swamp-poodle, the one now in use having done duty for about ten years, and being too much worn for good printing to be expected from it.

One of the chronics gave a good excuse for not meeting a payment on a bill he had promised to make recently, in this wise: "You see, me and my wife sit down on Saturday before payday and figure out how we are to divide my salary up on Tuesday, but as we were paid this time on Friday, of course we had not figured it up, and therefore I could not give you anything."

There are some men in this world whose places never will be filled—that is, equally as well—and one of these I believe was Harry Merrick, the paragrapher of the Post. In the few issues during recent years when his work failed to appear the inference would be drawn immediately that he had been seduced to New York by a princely salary, and regrets would be heard on all sides. Now that he is gone, the editorial page loses its most attractive feature, and I doubt if the paper will ever seem the same to a majority of its readers.

Night Bill Force.

On his card is illustrated
That he's running in the race,
And if such is not frustrated,
Onyun wins at such a pace.

Nearly half the force have been transferred to day work. M. G. Howe made the last choose. Next.

L. B. Cooley has been called to his home in New York because of the dangerous illness of his daughter.

Will E. Burchfield is president and W. F. P. White secretary-treasurer of our reorganized Benefit Association.

Mr. Wager.—"Say, Mr. Purvis, will you win——

Mr. Voter (Interrupting).—"Yes, by golly, we'll vote him in."

Wonder if it was due to the large attendance at the Union meeting Sunday, or to more important business, that the proposed amendment to Article XI, Section 4, was withdrawn?

We are more than pleased with the nominees for delegates from this force, Messrs. Purvis and Onyun, and just to guess as to their election we would place neither of them in close proximity with the "tail" end of the ticket.

Not until last week did G. W. McCord dissolve partnership with his friend "Single Blessedness." He reported for duty Monday night, and there was awaiting a grand guy for Guy. The joke was enjoyed by all but—even by Mac when the force presented a handsome clock to occupy the space which was so carefully uncovered only to reveal—well the revelations on the recently become groom's face were more attractive than the secreted office time piece. Mr. McCord's expectations were not totally defeated. UCM.

Down Town.

W. E. Kennedy, general organizer for the Electrical Workers, was in the city the past week, looking after the interests of his organization.

John A. Delaney, ex President of "Big Six," was in the city this week, being registered at the Raleigh with his wife. He is on his honeymoon.

Samuel Gompers and Frank Morrison are in Toronto, Canada, attending the meeting of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor.

R. E. Johnston, of the Specification Division, resigned Saturday. After spending the summer in the mountains of Virginia for the benefit of his health, he will locate in the far South in the fall.

W. B. Johnson, of the Second Division, G. P. O., was around during the week wearing a four-by-six smile, and being placed on the stand admitted that it was a boy, and that he arrived last Saturday.

Chas. W. Winslow, Business Agent for the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, No. 5, has returned from Philadelphia, after attending a conference of the executive officers of the International officers in that city.

In a letter from A. Riggs Nathan, formerly of the First Division, G. P. O., now in Sacramento, Cal., where he is chief of the proof room in the State printing office, he says that "Big Ben" Ferguson was employed on the State work during the recent session of the Legislature there, and is now in San Francisco. Riggs desires to be remembered to old associates in the Swamp.

Third Division.

SPRING POETRY.

"Please give me a ring," says William to Dave;
"A ring I must have mighty soon!"
"Go hence!" says the chairman, "to th' extreme rear should'st thou go,
And reclining position assume!"

"You're a h— of a chairman!" says William to Dave,
"And a vote of the chapel we'll take;"
"Get out of this alley!" says David to Will,
"Or a grease-spot of thee will I make!"

Twenty cents was the fine that the chairman imposed
His dignity thus to maintain;
This sum, tho' not great, was sufficient to make
Mr. Martin press warmly his claim.

A meeting was held—all hands were on deck,
Including Division 2;
With the chairman sustained and the fine declared off.
Both parties received their due.

Moral—When you want a ring, go to the pawnshop.

H. S. Edington has been on the sick list for several days.

As a result of the recent reduction of the force, there are a number of vacant chairs in this division.

Everyone now takes his time in getting out after the whistle blows. Depressing weather, dontcherknow?

Disciples of Ben Franklin who expect to rate high at the Department should not expectorate on the sidewalks around the G. P. O.

While speaking of the recent discharges in the G. P. O., a compositor in the Third Division was heard to remark: "I'll be very glad when we get in the new building because they say its "fire"-proof.

The "Old (and young) Man Eloquent" was in evidence Sunday afternoon, and pyrotechnical oratory in the nominating speeches thrilled our very souls. As every candidate nominated for delegate is "pre-eminently qualified for the position" we feel in duty bound to vote for 'em all.

If there is anything in a name, Mr. John A. Onyun will have a mighty strong in-scentive for believing that his election as one of the delegates to the coming I. T. U. convention is assured. He has "bean" throwing himself to "beet" the band in the matter of an exceedingly unique announcement card, in which he says, "I want you vote—I do," leaving us to infer that he is not only willing, but will be glad to "lettuce" all get on his scent on election day! This is one on you, Mr. Onyun.

MARCUS ANTONIUS.

Now for the gay and festive candidate.

The boys are now saving up for the Fall meeting.

Patsy McAuliffe is the official scorekeeper for this division.

Major Bailey was laid up with rheumatism for three days last week.

Joe Cross had Colonel Slack hunting for his transfer card the other day.

Colonel Cady has a safety razor for sale—one you can't cut yourself with.

This division has a strong bowling team, and the boys are making some fine strikes.

W. K. Martin is on leave and hopes the weather will be warmer when he gets back to work.

Friday morning this division received the following gentlemen from the Bill Force: G. G. Wilson, Joe Cross, C. H. Slack, C. A. Read, E. Coleman, C. J. Unger, J. H. Swerdfiger, J. W. Martin, Percy Rhodes, and F. H. Barnhart.

F. M. Woernke was transferred from the night force.

Mustaches are dropping like autumn leaves in November.

Last Tuesday was handshaking day with us. Four candidates were presented.

Grant E. Price who went to Los Angeles for his health is reported as improving.

E. F. Geyer, who went to his home in Indiana on account of the illness of his father, sent word that his father died.

George H. Healey was transferred from the night side. Mr. Healey is a Western newspaper man of considerable experience.

W. T. Hall has returned from his leave and a spell of the grip, which justified so nicely one with the other that he did not lose any time. It isn't everybody who has a cinch on fate.

George R. Boone, in response to a telegram, hurried to the home of his invalid sister in West Virginia last week. She had been suffering with a cancer for a long time, and died Friday, April 17.

Our linguists will find a new language to master when they have conquered the old ones. It is called "Esperanto," devised by Dr. Zamenhof, of St. Petersburg, for international use. It has already some 80,000 adherents, and has won the indorsement of Count Tolstoi and the late Max Mueller. Tolstoi says that with a grammar, a dictionary, and a few short articles in that idiom he was able at the end of a few short hours to easily read the language, and even to write some of it. In Paris there is a paper published in Esperanto and a New York firm has printed textbook on the same. Here is a sample sentence: "Libro j scienca publigata en tiu ci lingvo povas esti legata de cie en origino." Translated to English, it reads: "Scientific books in this language can be read by everybody in the original."

RAN.

A BIT OF ALL SORTS.

I suppose Tommy Bynum still carries that gold watch and chain presented him for being the good little boy of the Sunday School, as chronicled in the Sunday Post.

One of the best posted men and ablest writers on trade and labor subjects in this vicinity is William H. Kelly, of the Government Printing Office bindery, and I am always pleased to run across anything from his pen.

"Pard" Bloomer is reputed to have forsaken the jurisdiction of the Northeast Washington Citizens' Association for the aristocratic section of Capitol Hill Since "Pard" has developed into a successful writer of fiction I shall soon expect to see him join the literary colony out on Georgetown Heights.

Charley Thompson must have his hands full getting out the big Sunday Post in the limited room allowed him. To get out an issue of 40 to 50 pages is a big job when you have plenty of room, and he has about the worst quarters I ever saw it attempted in. But he makes good, all the same, and the Sunday Post is a corker.

From the Typographical Journal I gather that a move is being made to transfer the remains of ex-President E. T. Plank, of the I. T. U., from Butte, Mont., to San Francisco. I would suggest that the Union Printers' Home would be the proper resting place for the remains of this much honored and respected gentleman, and that a monument to his memory be erected there. Mr. Plank did great work for the International, and while the effort of the San Francisco printers is very commendable, I have no doubt but that they would be willing to see the change made to Colorado Springs.

A betting proposition made recently reminded me of a story Bill Nolle used to tell. Nolle was living in New York and voting in one of the precincts down in the neighborhood of Park Row. An important campaign was on and one night Nolle overheard a party offer to bet that there would not be a Republican vote cast in that precinct. Nolle knew of one Republican vote he was going to cast and thought his room mate would do the same, so he thought he would take advantage of a sure thing and make a little easy money, and he took the bet for a ten spot. On election day they went to the polling place about noontime, and Bill handed in his ticket with his name, and was informed that he had voted early that morning and was threatened with arrest for attempted repeating when he made a kick about it. Which convinced him that the proposer of the wager knew his business all right.

One of the members of the Washington Typothetae was telling me the other day what a fine time they had at their recent banquet, and got so enthusiastic over the good time they had that he told me some things that are not intended for the general public, I am pretty sure. He says that if a bid is asked for a job of printing, the firm requested to bid immediately telephones the fact to some official of the organization, and that official notifies all the other members, and gives them the amount of the first party's bid, and each member asked for a bid on that job thereafter must raise the price 3 per cent. If that isn't trust methods run mad, I don't know what is, and I don't think it will work, either. There is no need of any such bunco game. All that is necessary for them is to have a scale of prices—and adhere to it—just the same as the Unions do. If they try the other scheme there will be so many kicks coming that this firm is dodging one way and that firm dodging another that harmony will be out of the question, and the people who pay for the printing will not be long in ignorance of the fact that they are not being fairly treated, and will find some way to get even. Cut-throat competition has been the curse of the book and job printing business, but the scheme adopted will not cure it.

The recent fair of the Knights of Pythias recalls an incident connected with that order in which a particular friend of mine was one of the chief actors. This friend of mine is not a printer, but he held a position for many years that brought him in close contact with a large number of the craft and he had a great many friends among them. He is a man who takes a very active interest in all organizations with which he connects himself, and was commander of a legion or a cohort or whatever the designation of a body of the Uniformed Rank, K. P., may be, most of whom were employees of the Government Printing Office and he drilled them day in and out until he had them almost perfect. The Grand Encampment was held that year in Kansas City, and this friend of mine was out to carry off the grand prize for the best drilled body of men that showed up at that big turn out of the followers of Damon and Pythias. The parade was to pass the reviewing stand on the left, and my friend said he wheeled his command onto the main street with the full consciousness that the prize was his, when just before the grand stand containing all the high dignitaries was reached one of his men whispered, "Captain, Captain, look at P."—the man on the extreme left of the line. He glanced at P., who is still a well-known employe of the Printing Office, and that valiant Knight was keeping step with the band, as proud as a coon soldier on Emancipation Day, his head thrown back, and his sword in his left hand. That settled the prize business. The Captain said he was so angry he could not trust himself to mention the matter when they broke ranks, but he supposed the offender was imbued with the idea that his sword was for show, and the reviewing stand being on the left the people would be better able to see it if he carried it on the side next to them.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

The silent play is the strongest. Witness the division of the nuggets in "My Partner" or the check-book scene in "Iris." As day after day the editorial page of the Post is barren of the paragraph, the management pay a higher tribute to the memory of Merrick than would be contained in a deluge of fulsome flattery.

The mammoth editions of the daily papers has driven the Government to the issuance of a new wrapper, 8 by 12 inches in size, with a new 2-cent stamp bearing the portrait of George Washington.

With clock-work regularity each recurring nomination for International officers there forges to the front a bright light in oratory. This season the gentleman's name is Waterman, presenting the claims of Mr. Meritt.

There are other pebbles purveying the literature that is lurid, with the setting of the scene at the National Capitol. In a brief period will be presented "The Senator's Sweetheart," with an introduction by Mrs. Cushman K. Davis, a lady who, by the way, enjoyed the distinction of being the sweetheart of a celebrated Senator, and who should, per consequence, speak by the card.

Ainslee's Magazine introduced a commendable innovation when it places the line, "60 pages of reading matter," on its title page, a pleasing contradiction to the practice of having a handful of reading matter carry a wheelbarrow load of advertisements.

Catch this one, from the Baltimore News:

In "The Sorrows of Satan" we're told of a Prince
Who was dumped from a station exalted;
And who's trapped for the birds of sin busily since
Till their caudal appendage is salted.
And his once chance for glory depends, it appears,
On the birds of sin turning their flight about—
But his sorrows are nothing compared with the tears
Of the man who has nothing to write about.

When the sports flit, the savants swoop down on Washington, no less than seven scientific societies with unpronounceable names holding their annual convention in this city next month.

Grievance Committee Makes Report—The Heurich Brewing Co. Sign a New Agreement with Brewery Workers—Barbers Fighting for Recognition of Their Card.

The regular meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order on Monday evening by Vice President Sherman.

From Local No. 368, Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, certifying E. E. Hancock and P. A. Shea as delegates, vice William Courtney and William Larkin.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Grievance Committee reported that they had been unable to adjust difficulty between Machinists and E. H. Catlin & Co, 407 Thirteen-and-a-half street northwest, and with Zimmerman Milk Company and Milk Wagon Drivers. The committee recommended that the two firms named be placed on the unfair list Concurred in.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Columbia Lodge, No 174, I. A. M., stating that they had indorsed the placing of the Yale Laundry on the unfair list.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Brewery Workers submitted a contract with the Heurich Brewing Company for a term of three years, and asked for its indorsement. Request granted.

Barbers called up a communication that had been laid over from a previous meeting, and requested action on same. The communication was read and delegates instructed to lay the matter before their union.

Bartenders reported that they would fine any of their members who patronized the Yale Laundry. They also called attention to the recently organized Waiters' Union, and asked that all members of unions insist on "Green Button" waiters.

Carriage and Wagon Builders called attention to Chevy Chase Lake resort, and requested that the matter be referred back to the Grievance Committee for report. After considerable discussion the request was concurred in.

Carpet Upholsterers called attention to P. Grogan on the unfair list, and requested that he be left severely alone until such time as he unionizes his establishment.

Hod Carriers reported that the contractor on the Hecht & Co. building was using nonunion hod carriers. Referred to Building Trades Council.

Milk Wagon Drivers asked that action placing Zimmerman Milk Company on unfair list be reconsidered. Carried. The matter was then referred to special committee, Tripittoe, Brinkman, and McCarthy.

Retail Clerks reported that they had placed Union Store Cards in all establishments where all employees were members of their union.

The secretary was directed to secure music for the occasion.

Committee in charge of Mail Bag Repairers' matter reported progress.

Delegate Gates, of the Iron Molders, moved that a committee be appointed to enter into negotiations with the proprietors of THE TRADES UNIONIST relative to furnishing a copy of that paper to all members of unions affiliated with the Central Labor Union. The motion was carried.

A committee was appointed to investigate the statement that a firm had offered to put union labels on nonunion goods.

The Journeymen Tailors presented a circular showing fair and unfair employees of their trade and urged delegates to bring the matter before their unions.

A Progressive Move.

The Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union, better known as the Building Trades Section, has made a move in the right direction.

The Section, which is composed of delegates from the building trades, has been meeting at Typographical Temple, Room 10, but these quarters being too small, they were obliged to seek more commodious quarters.

It is the intention of the Council to lease the entire building, known as the late Business Men's Club, 719 Sixth street northwest, and sublet to all organizations who may desire to change their quarters. This building is admirably adapted for such a purpose, as it contains three halls, office rooms, and a recreation room where the unemployed union men may congregate during the day. The secretary's office will be furnished with telephone service, which will be accessible to all card men, and desk room for different business agents, thus centralizing the business under one roof.

In order to successfully carry out these plans the Council has appointed a committee for the purpose of giving an entertainment for the purpose of assisting in defraying the expense of renting this building.

The Great Game.

After several weeks of "bouquet-throwing" at each other and an unlimited amount of boasting, the bowling teams of the main job room and the annex, of the G. P. O., the former terming themselves the "Rabbits" and the latter the "Selling Platers," sallied forth one night recently, and met on the field of honor to do battle at the Rathskeller. A large and enthusiastic number of admiring rooters of both teams gathered to witness the game, and enthusiastically applauded the good bowling done by their favorites. The game was a hot one and fiercely contested from start to finish. Not until the last ball had been bowled, and the battle ended, was the result known. It follows:

SELLING PLATERS.	First game.	Sec'nd game.	Third game.	Total.
Nicholson	129	141	106	376
Sheldon	126	110	109	345
Clark	124	177	169	470
Morris	104	84	102	290
McWhorter	123	155	150	428
Total	606	667	636	1909

RABBITS.	First game.	Sec'nd game.	Third game.	Total.
Bechart	152	135	131	418
Leith	86	69	95	250
Peed	103	96	143	342
Warner	115	139	122	376
Fitzwilliam	159	190	159	508
Total	615	629	650	1894

NOTES OF THE GAME.

Tompkins was official scorer, and well he knew his biz.

The boys put up an interesting game, in all that the word implies.

Sheldon had his "weather eye" open, and Peed was the sufferer to the extent of $$$.

McWhorter went at it with the right spirit—like an old hand. He had third highest score.

Leith was new at the game and not in good form, but will be in better shape for the next game.

Warner bowled in a listless sort of mechanical manner, as if he were afraid he should hurt the pins. He never even "shed his coat."

Clark and Fitzwillam bowled the highest number for their respective teams. They were "there with the goods" each and every time.

The Selling Platers are not satisfied. They have challenged for another game. It will be played on Thursday night, and "will be for blood."

Notwithstanding the fact that the game was won by the Rabbits, the Selling Platers had the largest score. It was best "two out of three."

Peed lost his coin in the first, his nerve in the second, but redeemed himself "in the stretch." His large score in the last game made his team the victors.

The members of the teams and their friends enjoyed a jollification after the game, and "how it happened" was the theme of the conversation between the "soothers" and the "o-be-joyfuls."

Captain Fitz looked worried, as things looked dubious at the end of the second game, and that faraway, woe-begone agonizing expression never left his face until the last ball was bowled. Then he "cheered up."

The floor seemed to slip from under the feet of Morris several times during the progress of the game. He was doing some lively "stunts," which would have done credit to Marie Dressler or "Waltz-Me-Again" Wilson.

Sheldon and Nicholson demonstrated that they were too fat to stay the limit, and it is hinted that one or the other of them "sold out." Their scores in the last of the games give evidence of the rumor having good foundation.

Fitzwilliam received a gold medal for the highest individual score in the game. It was made of the same kind of metal as was the last gold brick Sheldon purchased in New York. Col. William Sipher, in a characteristic and graceful manner, made the presentation speech.

ROOTER.

Boston building laborers will show their strength in a street parade next fall.

The Union Printers' Home.

Superintendent Deacon, of the Union Printers' Home, has made a detailed report for the month of March, which shows a total expenditure of $6,917.44. Of this amount $803.01 is charged to the furnishing account; $1,980.74 to the building account, and $920.17 for insurance. The actual maintenance for the month was $3,031.75, leaving the cost per inmate for the month at $25.91. Average number of inmates for the month, 117; average cost per meal per inmate, 8½ cents.

It is a source of general satisfaction to the members of the I. T. U. to feel assured that the interests of the organization is so ably subserved by the present Superintendent, whose monthly reports are clear and concisely made out, making it apparent to the membership at large that a businesslike management of the Home insures to the residents of that grand institution all the benefits that should accrue to them.

In an article recently published in this paper the writer paid a deserving compliment to Superintendent Deacon for the efficiency he displays in the conduct of the Home, and while credit should be given to its Board of Trustees for the advance made in its maintenance, no small share of that credit is due to Mr. Deacon and his estimable wife, as matron, in caring for the wards of our membership, and supplying every want in reason for their well being in the Home.

Bindery Notes.

Jack Quinlan's suspenders are a standing monument to the refined taste of Dan Foley, who purchased them for him.

Alex. Tosh and Frank Meredith went for a walk Sunday out Bladensburg way. Their luck was bad and they walked home.

The familiar cry of "Fall in!" from Captain Toomey was again heard on Friday last. Everyone was glad to see the Captain again restored to health.

Jake Weidman is now using Pat Finnegan's hair restorer. He has some doubt as to its efficacy, and thinks of using Johnny Emerson's sage tea remedy.

"Cheap-skate Shad" has a regular Sunday morning "graft" route now. He avoids George Barnes' house because it costs money to stop there, but he works Dwyer and Stack all right.

John Fox and Fred. Schlick, evidently hearing of the scarcity of work just now in the Bindery, have started into the banana business. They were seen the other day struggling up the street with a huge bunch.

Alex. Boyd and his brother-in-law, seeing the gate of the baseball grounds open, made a bolt in, when one of the finest made his appearance and ordered Alex to retire. He sat on his porch and heard the score later on.

Charley Goldthwaite went down town the other evening to see the baseball score. He had bet on Washington. The bulletin showed Boston, 3; Washington, 0. This was not satisfactory, so he went across the street and ate a light lunch. Returning later, he noticed the score stood Washington, 6; Boston, 3. At this glance he went off and ate a hearty dinner.

Some time ago the Knights of Pythias invited the Bookbinders to come to their fair. On the night appointed the only one who seemed to regard the invitation was John S. Weidman, and he marched to the hall with a band in front of him and one behind him. John was determined the Bookbinders should be represented, and what the crowd lacked in numbers it made up in respectability.

Bill Haslett invited Gus Bauer and a Baltimore friend to be his guests one day last week. He evidently thought they were "dead ones," for the first place he escorted them to was an undertaker. The latter, not wishing to be burdened with them, furnished them with a carriage, with instructions to take them out in the country and try to them. They returned, however, and dismissed the driver, as Bill did not wish to have anyone to divide the "graft" with him.

PASTE.

Labor Day will fall on September 7.

Night Bill Force.

R. G. Bailey has left the city.

Sixty-eight now numbers the strength of our force.

We understand B. L. Stidham will leave for Texas soon.

A. E. Cowles, F. D. Smith, and Oliver Bennett had complimentary tickets to the first baseball game of the season.

It seems hard nowadays to decide whether a profession or a trade is the preferable mode of securing a livelihood.

J. L. Rodier favorably impressed the boys by his call Monday night. We guess about two-thirds of the force will support Mr. Rodier.

If your opinion as to the election of a candidate is to him favorably expressed—"flattery;" but if to the contrary, "You don't know what you are talking about." We speak from experience.

"He who laughs last laughs best." With this saying as an indicator, it would be necessary to place new candidates on the ticket, for the many office seekers and wish-to-be delegates who have by their visit paid tribute to the force during the week were all smiles; audible smiles, too.

The "stag" party given at the residence of Will E. Burchfield was doubly O. K. The elocutional and musical talent of the force caused the evening to be more than pleasant. John Purvis sang "The Open Gate" and "A Son of the Desert;" Frank Smith recited "The Other One Was Booth," "Casey at the Bat," and gave character impersonations; Will Burchfield sang "I Love You" and "The Sentinel Asleep," with John Greene, jr., as accompanist, and Ed. Burkholder sang "That Old Sweetheart of Mine." G. D. Ellis, A. L. Huss, John B. Weitzel, D. M. Carter, and others were present. The repast was in keeping with the excellence of the party—first class.

Studious Stephen, or the Walking Encyclopedia.

[With apologies to George Ade.]

Once upon a time there descended down from out of the Tall and Uncut a Party whom we will call Studious Stephen. After a time he separated himself from the Pine Needles and blossomed forth a genuine Fount of Information. In fact, in was the Whole Thing. Were a discussion started in the Alley S. S. Butted right into the Game and made the rest of the Gang hit all the High Places. It did not make any difference what the Subject was, S. S. was It. In his estimation nothing was too Obtuse, from Protoplasms to the Nebular Hypothesis. He was Doped up on all such Lore. But sometimes S. S. Overreached himself, and, had he been endowed with Sporting Blood he would have been a Meal Ticket for the Gang.

Every room has an S. S., so I will let the reader guess his slug.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Carpenters Do Not Anticipate Trouble in Enforcing New Scale.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at the appointed hour by Chairman Meitzler. In the absence of Secretary Ratigan, C. W. Winslow acted as secretary.

Roll call disclosed the presence of 24 delegates from 15 unions.

Minutes of prievious meeting read, corrected, and approved.

Delegates from Slate and Tile Roofers stated that their credentials should have been sent in by their secretary. The delegates were seated pending receipt of credentials.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Central Labor Union Committee reported that Hecht & Co. was employing nonunion hod carriers. Referred to Business Agent.

Entertainment Committee reported progress, and asked that the committee be increased by the addition of five members. Granted, and the Chair appointed Delegates Russell, McVey, Sheetz, Burrier, and Beckett.

Committee having in charge the grievance between the Marble and Slate Tile Cutters and Setters and the Tile Layers stated that they could not agree, and asked that the committee be discharged and the matter referred to the Grievance Committee of the Central Labor Union. Granted.

Communications from several organizations relative to hall were read and referred to the Hall Committee.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Steam Fitters reported the Yale Laundry matter as still unsettled.

Steam Fitters' Helpers presented contract, to go into effect July 1. Referred to Executive Committee.

Carpenters reported that their new scale would go into effect May 1 and that no trouble was anticipated.

Wood, Wire and Metal Lathers reported the employment of nonunion lathers by Frank Smith, on Rhode Island avenue, between North Capitol and First streets. Referred to Executive Committee.

Slate and Tile Roofers reported trouble on Trumbull street pumping station. Referred to Executive Committee.

Adjourned.

Employers Held Liable.

Employers who fail to explain to men taking the places of others who may be out on a strike the annoyance or violence to which they are exposed are liable for damages in case injury is done. This is the opinion of the Colorado Court of Appeals, just handed down in the case of Wm. Holtzhauzer, who, while in the employ of the Denver Gas and Electric Company, was shot by striking employes of the company. He declared that he was hired without being told that there was a strike at the plant.

In giving the opinion Justice Thomson said: "The controlling feature of this case is that the employer knowingly exposed the employe to personal danger and concealed the danger from him. It is intimated that during the intervening time the plaintiff ought to have discovered that a strike was in progress and that the defendant's old employes were in no tranquil state of mind.

"How he might have made the discovery unless he had seen or heard something to suggest inquiry we are not told. It is alleged that the plaintiff did not know that there was a strike or that he was in any danger until he was attacked, an explicit statement of facts not to be met by mere argument."

Employers Organize Against Unions.

Definite steps were taken at Indianapolis recently for the organization of a national union of employers of labor and non-union men.

The purpose is to protect men who do not care to affiliate with unions, to assist its individual members in obtaining the highest wages consistent with the highest good, and to compel labor unions to observe and respect the law.

The association will be incorporated under the name "American Association of Independent Mechanics."

British pottery works employ 70,000 work people, of whom about 25,000 are women and children.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION LABEL COUNCIL WASHINGTON. 2

THURSDAY, APRIL 30, 1903.

I would as soon think of doing business without clerks as without advertising.
—JOHN WANAMAKER.

Nothing, except the mint, can make money without advertising.
—GLADSTONE.

When you pay more for the rent of your business house than for advertising your business, you are pursuing a false policy. If you can do business, let it be known.
—FRANKLIN.

MEMBERS of labor union who use "Grape Nuts" or "Postum Cereal Coffee" should notice the speech of Mr. C. W. POST, who manufactures those health foods. This is one paragraph of his address before the National Association of Manufacturers at New Orleans on Tuesday, April 14:

There may have been some brutal and tyrannous slave-owners in the South, but I ask you if ever in the history of negro slavery did there exist such a condition of oppression, cruelty to men, women, and children; terror, anarchy, beatings, and murder as now exists under the acts of desperate members of labor unions.

Mr. POST also advertises in the Los Angeles Times.

THE movement to create a sentiment among members of the I. T. U. looking to the placing of a memorial tablet at the Union Printers' Home to Ex-President PLANK for his many sacrifices to advance the cause of unionism will meet with the hearty approval of all who knew him and admired him for his many sterling qualities. In this connection it might be also considered appropriate to place some distinctive mark of respect over the grave of ROBERT E. CRAIG, who is among the number of our dead on the grounds of the Home, having been a resident of the Home at the time of his death a few years ago. Mr. CRAIG was elected president of the I. T. U. at the thirteenth session, held at Philadelphia in 1865. He represented St. Louis Union, and succeeded A. M. CARVER, of Cincinnati, as president. In placing memorial stones to our honored dead let us not forget the fathers of our organization, even though we may not pay all the homage due them in life.

Archbishop BRUCHESI, of Montreal, Canada, in a pastoral letter to his diocese, is reported to have used the following remarks in respect to labor leaders:

Responsibility is not incurred by those leaders and writers who profit by the slightest conflict between labor and capital to foment discord and rebellion and inspire hatred toward employers. They are the most dangerous foes of the people whose interests they pretend to serve. Let not our laboring classes heed their suggestions. They have absolutely nothing to gain. Deceived by these false friends and urged on by them to commit the most lamentable acts, they will, on the contrary, forfeit public sympathy.

It is evident that the reverend Archbishop has not received his impressions from association with labor leaders and writers, but has no doubt been a reader of publications that have not been subsidized in the interest of labor. What effect his letter may have upon the wage-earners in Canada is problematical, but from past expressions of men higher and better known in the Roman Catholic Church than the Archbishop organized labor will not have cause for alarm from this source at this outburst of Parryism by the reverend Archbishop of Montreal.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

The campaign is going on quietly, but earnestly. Most of the candidates for delegate have been in and smiled upon us, as have those for vice-president, but the candidates for the other offices don't seem to care, Adam Bugg, whether we vote for them or not. I have about made up my ticket, and as I have no further favors to ask, I don't see why I should not give it out.

I am going to vote for Joe Babcock, because he is a good fellow, a sterling union man, has rendered the union long and faithful service as a delegate to the Central Labor Union and in other capacities, has the ability to properly represent the union, and because he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for Tom Fitzwilliam because he is a good fellow, a union man from the cradle up, ready to serve the union whenever called on, a good Indian, and because he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for Edgar Meritt because he is a good fellow, a close student, a ready debater, has served faithfully as vice-president and presided over the union with impartiality and ably whenever called to the chair, and because he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for Harry O'Donnell because he is a good fellow, has done the union much arduous and valuable committee service, is capable and sincere, and because he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for John Onyun because he is a good fellow, a sterling union man who has been often tried and never found wanting, a wild Western product who is needed to regenerate the effete East, and because he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for John Purvis because he is a good fellow, a union man who is like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion; because he has done the union much efficient service, because he will look well on the floor of the I. T. U., and because he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for Joe Stelle because he is a good fellow, has done and is still doing the union excellent service as a committeeman, because I have always known him and by my precept and example have done much to help him up to his present enviable standing, and because he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for Frank Stretton because he is a good fellow, because he has been an old rounder, and one who would have traveled on cattle ships and in box cars if it had been necessary; because he is a steady-minded statesman, and because he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for Cos Rodier because he is a good fellow, born with a love of unionism in him, the ablest offhand speaker in our ranks, has done the union much service and given its presidents much trouble, and because he he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for Frank Lerch because he is a good fellow, a distinguished ex-vice-president, a persistent and consistent union man, a willing worker in the union's service, and because he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for Dan Vaughan for vice-president because he is a good fellow, because it is a nice little job for a nice little man, because he wants it, and because he voted for me last year.

I am going to vote for Brer Abbott for vice-president because he is a good fellow, because he wants it, can fill it, and it don't make any difference who is vice-president anyway, and because he voted for me last year.

I don't suppose anybody cares why I'm going to vote for Johnson, Garrett, Berg, and the rest of the push, nor whether I do so at all or not. If anybody can get any light from the above as to whom he should vote for, my mission is accomplished.

From my advices it appears likely that George P. Nichols and Charlie Bastian will be the delegates from Baltimore to the I. T. U. The election of these two gentlemen will be almost like adding two to the Washington delegation, so closely allied to us are they in friendship and interest.

From the Des Moines (Iowa) Plain Talk of April 18 I learn of the death in that city of John H. Campbell, who was an ex-mayor of Des Moines. Mr. Campbell was a compositor in the G. P. O. during Mr. Rounds' administration and will be remembered by those who were here at that time. It is said that it was on his suggestion that the large proof presses, by which a proof can be taken of the largest forms, were installed. I am under the impression that he was for a time connected with the press room also. At his funeral were Crocker Post, G. A. R., of which he was a past commander; Donelson Command of the U. V. U., and Myrtle-Capital Lodge, K. P., of each of which he was a member, and the mayor and council of the city, the county officers, and large numbers of citizens.

Colonel Busby has been referred to in this department once or twice recently, and as there are a number here who have known the old fellow, the following, from a Western paper, will be found interesting. It was handed to me by Comrade Candidate John A. Onyun:

Col. Ike Busby, the veteran typographical tourist, draws a pension of $6 a month. He used to get $12, but Hoke Smith cut him down. Busby was in the First Kansas. "I was earning more than a hundred dollars a month, working for old John Speer in Lawrence when I enlisted as a private at $11 a month," said Busby, "yet once in a while I hear from some damned skunk who doesn't believe in pensions, who wants to know if the Government didn't pay me for all I did while I was in the service."

R. G. Bailey, formerly of Butte, Mont., who was one of those "let out" last week from the Night Bill Force, had intended resigning in a week or so to go prospecting in the Thunder Mountain gold field, as the representative of the Nonpariel Mining and Developing Company, which was organized last fall, with R. G. Bailey, president; R. P. Piehoff, vice-president; R. W. Burkhart, secretary, and A. H. McKnight, treasurer. Mr. Bailey will visit friends in Virginia and at Atlanta, Ga., until about May 10, when he will start for Idaho, and will take with him in the hills a practical prospector and miner, an outfit, and four months' rations. He has had considerable experience in the mountains of Idaho and Montana and is not a tenderfoot in the work. The company expects to incorporate and put stock on the market next fall.

A very interesting letter from W. E. Shields was read at the meeting of G. P. O. Council, National Union, at the meeting last Saturday night. Mr. Shields retains his membership in this council and his interest in it is as strong as if he were still in Washington instead of Denver.

A resolution having been adopted by the national Senate of the National Union providing that May 11 shall be observed as National Union Day, the new council which Mr. Dierken and Mr. Ricketts are organizing will be instituted on that day, as peculiarly appropriate, being the birthday of the Order. The new council will open with something over 100 members and has the brightest prospects for a prosperous career.

John W. Thomas, so long an employe of the Proof Room, but now for several years sorely afflicted, has been taken to the Home for Incurables in Georgetown. He will be glad to have his friends call on him, and as all days are visiting days it will be an easy matter for those who wish to do so.

Specification Notes.

In Onyun there is strength. I don't know the gentleman, but admire his card.

I congratulate Bro. Joe Johnson on his renomination to presidency of the union. May the craft profit thereby.

The Spec. force is at present doing double duty, with pay in accordance. Think of war heroes, with only single pay while serving their country, and rejoice accordingly.

Somehow, I have got mixed up with things appertaining to spooks or ghosts. Perhaps I may find time to describe such things, in a future column, as there seems to be much curiosity in this direction.

Theological discussions are ripe in alley 1. Brothers Schmaling and Montgomery are the learned discussers on points of doctrine. Miss Russell serves as a balance-wheel and preserves the equilibrium of the parties in dispute.

The crafty Rogers and Montgomery daily lay pitfalls for the righteous, and Brother Laing mostly tumbles—in. Rogers dared Gus to repeat a delectable story, but, "oh no; oh, no." He also fights shy of nautical matters, in which barnacles, bottoms, and boats figure.

With the chapel's permission, I will compliment our chairman, Mr. Hutchison. "The world do move," and it seems to me each new chairman progresses in the duties of his office in matters which require tact, efficiency, and courtesy. If he doesn't give me a ring for this the next time I ask him I will go on the warpath after his scalp.

Horse talk has ceased for the nonce, Some are in and some are out —— of pocket, but the same old thing will happen over again, which reminds me of a ditty—

As long as the world goes round;
And so it will be,
As you plainly may see,
As long as the world goes round.

Brother Grumley hugely appreciates a joke, even when perpetrated at his expense. Jim —— Alburtis (Arbutus), genus, the first flowers of spring, very sweet, pink color, familiarly known as trailing arbutus, is quoted as affirming that Grumley, status proofreader, when he viewed the new top line in the heads, direfully rose up, approached the chair of state, status Major Dodge, and exclaimed: "What a d—euced fool that new compositor is." However, Al is known for his joking propensities, so the Spec. force is still guessing whether the tale is true or not.

H. O. W. HUMPHREY.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

The meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, which met at Typographical Temple on Saturday evening last, was very well attended, despite the fact that it was the closing night of the K. of P. fair. Several interesting letters from out-of-town friends were read, and an acknowledgment was made by the secretary of the National Auxiliary, Mrs. Ed. D. Donnell, that the Washington branch was the banner branch in so far as membership goes.

Mrs. John McCormick kindly offered the Auxiliary the use of her large lawn at Hyattsville for a lawn fete. The offer was accepted, and the evening of Monday, May 18, was decided upon as the most appropriate time to give the lawn fete. Tickets for admission to the grounds will be only ten cents. Refreshments will be served and provision for dancing will be made.

The members of the Auxiliary were disappointed in seeing so few of the candidates for office in Columbia Union present. Messrs. Vaughan, Meritt, and O'Donnell, being called upon, made addresses. R. A. Julian, H. J. Redfield, A. W. Bowen, and F. C. Roberts also addressed the meeting. Following some extended remarks by the president of the Auxiliary on the abuse and evils of child labor, refreshments were served, the floor was cleared, and dancing indulged in.

The next meeting of the Auxiliary will be held at Typographical Temple on Friday, May 8, at 8 p. m., at which time nominations for delegates to the Woman's National Auxiliary, which will be held in this city at the time of the International Typographical Union convention, will be made. Several important committees will be elected that evening. While the delegates will be nominated on the above evening, the election will not take place until the following meeting, which will be held on the evening of Friday, May 22. The officers of the Auxiliary hope that as the time is drawing near for the convention that the next meeting will be a record-breaker.

And now it is the ice man.

Good fishing at the Chain Bridge.

The candidates are making votes.

Next Tuesday is election day in Baltimore.

The Evening Times installed a new Merganthaler last Friday.

New York Typographical Union, No. 6, paid International Typographical Union per capita tax for January on 6,000 members.

Stuart Robson, the actor, who died on Wednesday last, was at one time early in life a printer on the Star of this city. He was sixty-seven years old at the time of his death.

Secretary Bramwood of the International Typographical Union, will be in the city on or about Sunday next to make arrangements for the coming convention of the I. T. U. next August.

"Big Six" Annual Ball.

The annual ball of Typographical Union, No. 6, was held at Grand Central Palace in that city on the night of Wednesday, April 22. It was one of the largest crowds that has ever been seen in that popular amusement building. Two bands furnished the music and about 1,000 couples were in line in the grand march. The affair was a decided success, financially and otherwise, and it is believed that $1,000 will be realized for the Cummings Memorial Fund through the entertainment.

The unions of Oklahoma City, Okla., are forming a labor temple association.

First Division.

THE BOWLERS.

In the cold and dreary winter
When the air is full of frost-bite
And the coal fire in the kitchen
Keeps the water pipes from freezing,
Then it is the merry bowlers,
Strong men of the First Division,
Hie themselves to the Rathskeller,
Bowl with balls and mugs and glasses,
Sometimes low and sometimes highballs,
Shout and call unto the pin boys,
Trying to outdo each other
And to do the other fellows.
With the bunch comes Big Chief Mabrey,
Judge, they call him—Judge and Chairman:
Broad he is, and tall, and wider,
Bigger than the other bowlers;
And his good right arm is stronger
Than the mighty Delehanty's.
When he bowls the sleepy pin boys
Have the snap of their existence—
Slumber on when he is bowling,
Waking now and then to josh him,
Josh and kid him when he misses.
Next in line comes Captain Robbie—
Robbie, chieftain of tin soldiers,
Making merry with the pins,
Bowling fast and bowling often,
Making strikes and spares and misses.
Thus they go on winter evenings—
Jones, and Clark, and Shorty Nesbitt,
Nachman, King, and many others—
Rolling, bowling with each other,
Winning fame and breaking records,
Blowing foam from off the glasses,
Standing off the trustful barkeep,
Telling him they'll settle pay day,
And the barkeep, smiling sadly,
Gazes at the empty glasses,
While he wipes away the tear drops;
And the loud reverberation
Of the balls and of the ten pins
Wake the echoes of the alleys,
Of the streets and of the alleys,
Till the people, wondering, listen,
Speaking, saying to each other
'Tis the voice of Arthur Bloomer
Jumping on the other fellows,
Jeering at their style of writing,
Knocking on their squibs and items
When they chance to rub him crossways.
But they said to one another
Never must we mind his jeering,
Never mind his jibes and joshing,
For he, with his wondrous poems,
Teaches us pronunciation,
Confidently tells us "Leicester"
Should be spelled the same as "jester;"
And his lucid poems tells us
Just exactly how to say it.
Thus it is that when they hear him
Jeering at the other fellows
They remember that he teaches
How he teaches printers grammar,
Spelling, and pronunciation,
And they never make a murmur.

The suit of clothes that was raffled off at the Odd-Fellows' fair was won by J. C. Lesher of this division.

George W. Woodgate won the baseball season ticket that was raffled off by the Knights of Pythias at their late fair.

Capt. "Tony" Garner contemplates going to Paris this summer with Mr. Fiesse, who goes over every year to see his aged mother.

Candidate Babcock has been off sick with the grip and was unable to pay a visit to a great many places on that account. He has returned and will go after the push from now on.

The following gentlemen were transferred from the Night Force to this division: W. A. Mitchell, Louis C. Johnson, Arthur J. McMillan, Robert P. Piehoff, A. J. Campbell, A. H. McKnight, and Edgar P. Bennett.

Quite an amusing thing happened during Joe Stelle's visit to this room. Chairman Mabrey introduced Joe to "Colonel" Bentz, when Joe, in acknowledging the introduction, said: "I am glad to meet you, Colonel; I'm a soldier also."

The following will show how to get on a winner:

Second Division.

Have you taken your leave?

The campaign is being conducted in a dignified manner.

Charles H. Davis is working temporarily at the slug rack.

S. M. Simpson and M. A. Maloney have been transferred to the Spess.

Hon. Wellington Franklin Simons received his "absolute" appointment last week for "efficiency, industry, and adaptability."

The new symposium starts off well. The day after its organization a 10-pound boy arrived at the home of its President, W. B. Johnson.

A bunch of Thunder Mountain literature was laid on the desk late Saturday afternoon. It was thought to be transfers—enough to go around.

During the first three months of 1903 the Second (smallest division in the office) contributed $91.61 for charitable purposes—over $1 per day.

Last Monday morning there was not one printer of this division on leave, absent, or tardy. Every one at his frame. How's that for attendance?

E. J. Scanlon, Robt. E. Bragg, F. M. Claflin, George R. Merriam, Frank O. Sanders, and A. M. Willingham were transferred to this division from the night force.

A. W. Sefton, Jr., formerly of the Fourth Division, argues strenuously against rotation in office on the people's page of Monday's Post. Nothing is certain on this earth.

One candidate remarked: "I would be satisfied if I knew my division was as staunch in my support as the Second seems to be for Mr. Meritt." We are proud of our candidate.

Sassafras tea for thinning the blood is not universally popular in this room. Even during these balmy spring days people will come from a neighboring alley and close a small crack in the window.

"Apothecary" LeMerle does not display any colored bottles or mortar and pestle over his frame, but he has the medicine just the same and toothache, headache, or any indisposition can be alleviated at his shop.

The Second Division has sufficiently recovered to organize another symposium. Webster defines symposium as "a drinking together; a merry feast" This definition may have been appropriate to the old sym., but does not apply to the new one.

"Texas" Phillips has become a camera fiend; Mr. Dillman, of this room, is an already famous artist; while F. W. Prather, formerly on the night side in this room, has copyrighted a popular picture of the President's train leaving Pennsylvania station on his 4,000-mile trip.

Fifth Division.

F. W. Follett is taking a vacation.

F. E. Ellingsen went to the Interior Branch last week.

H. P. McKevitt is suffering with rheumatism in his right foot, but he is still able to come to work.

W. H. Van Bibber left Wednesday for Roanoke, Va., to accept a position with the Stone Printing Company.

Carl R. Tegethoff utilized a half day last Monday to change his place of abode. He is now enjoying the altitude of Capitol Hill.

N. H. Lytle, John A. Kinneard, W. H. Guthridge, W. A. Roberts, and E. H. Andrew came in from the night force last Tuesday. All but the last named have been in this division before.

Frank J. Sloan, who worked in this division several years ago, has finished a six-weeks' training at the Washington Linotype School, and last week went to Norfolk, intending to work on machines there.

A. W. Sefton, jr., late of the Fourth Division, has accepted a position with a New York publishing house as Spanish copy preparer. Later he intends returning to Washington to establish himself in business here.

Frank M. Floyd, who recently moved to the city, has been living in the country so long that one day, being more venturesome than usual, he strayed too far away from his home and was lost on North Seventh street some where. Had it not been for the timely discovery of him by Judge Underwood he would no doubt still be looking for a cowpath or a blazed road.

The action of the Hebrew printers of New York in winning a four-hour day seems to point to a solution of the vital question, "What shall be done with the ever increasing surplus of workers?" The shorter the workday the greater the number of men to do a given amount of work. With the marvelous success of the inventions and manufacture of labor-saving machinery, with which one man can do the work of many, it is absolutely necessary to subdivide the time in order that the privilege to earn a living may be within the reach of all.

Treasury Division.

John T. Williams, pressman, was transferred back to the main office about two weeks ago.

Miss Isabel Long, of the folding room, has been absent from the office for several days suffering with the mumps.

All of the candidates from the G. P. O. have made the rounds of this division. It is up to the downtown candidates now.

Miss Lizzie Schaefer, forelady of the folding room, is on leave. Miss Gertie Stern is filling her place during her absence.

Misses Flora S. Edwards and Haddie Z. Coskery, of the folding room, were transferred to the main office one day last week.

Elmer E. Coates, Geo. C. Williams, Eugene F. Smith, Harry E. Giles, Daniel McFadden, and E. N. Bunker were transferred to the Job Room Tuesday of last week.

Mrs. A. E. I. Andrews, for some time an employee of our folding room, died Monday morning, April 20, from cancer of the stomach. Mrs. Andrews had been ill since the latter part of last year and had been a great sufferer.

Miss Edna G. McClure, granddaughter of Mr. Theophilus McClure, of this division, died Monday evening, April 27, at the Columbia Hospital, where she underwent an operation the day before for appendicitis. The funeral took place Thursday morning at 9 o'clock from St. Patrick's Church. Miss McClure was 19 years old and very popular. Her sudden death came as a shock to her many friends.

Clint Price, who is a member of the Grievance Committee of the Union, is, of course, naturally opposed to working with rats, so when the night watchman informed him one morning last week that he had seen a large rodent run into the proof room, Price and Gery made up their minds to exterminate him forthwith. It was not long before their search revealed his whereabouts, and once located he was soon put to a cruel and sudden death.

A Short-Lived Call-Off of the Building Trades.

The difficulties existing between the Amalgamated Carpenters and the Brotherhood, which has been smoldering for some months, broke out fresh Wednesday when the George A. Fuller Company introduced Amalgamated men on the New Willard addition and the Trumbull street pumping station. The matter was called to the attention of the Business Agent of the Council of Allied Building Trades, and on Thursday he ordered all men on both jobs to refrain from working until the Brotherhood men were reinstated. After a lapse of an hour J. H. Dinwiddie, manager of the Fuller Company for this section, sent for the Business Agent, and an agreement was entered into whereby the George A. Fuller Company agrees only to employ members of organized labor that are affiliated with the Council of Allied Building Trades. This agreement also covers the Hod Carriers' Union, which has been striving to secure recognition from the Fuller Company on its work for some months past.

INSULT IS RESENTED.

Los Angeles Times Tries to Use President Roosevelt to Slap Labor.

[Special Correspondence.]

LOS ANGELES, CAL., April 24, 1903.

For thirteen years the notorious scab Los Angeles Times has daily slandered organized labor. So intemperate is its opposition to unionism that H. G. Otis, the editor, is regarded as insane upon the subject. Otis has been guilty of innumereble petty tricks, but during the past week he has exceeded himself for genuine meanness. Learning that President Roosevelt, who will be in Los Angeles on May 8, would be the guest of organized labor in Montana before coming here, Otis sought to have the labor unions of Los Angeles slapped in the face by having the citizen's committee on arrangements snub the local unions by not inviting them to participate in the reception to the President. But the committee, composed of leading citizens, refused to thus insult the President and organized labor, and, on the contrary, an invitation was promptly extended the officials of the County Council of Labor to occupy seats upon the official platform with the President while he reviews the floral parade to be given in his honor. This boomerang has infuriated Otis, and his infamous Times shrieks with rage But the more he displays his petty spite the more organized labor is respected for the great fight it is waging against Otis.

If every reader of THE TRADES UNIONIST would write letters to the following advertisers in the notorious scab Los Angeles Times, asking that they withdraw, and withhold further patronage until they do so, much good would be accomplished:

Cuticura—Potter Drug and Chemical Corporation, Boston, Mass.
Force—The Force Food Co., Buffalo, N. Y.
H. O.—Hornby Oatmeal Co., Buffalo, N. Y.
Postum—Postum Cereal Co., Battle Creek, Mich.
Peruna—Peruna Medical Co., Columbus, Ohio.
Wilson Whiskey—Wilson Distilling Co., 100 Broadway, New York.
Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.
"Tutt's Liver Pills"—Tutt's Manufacturing Co., New York, N. Y.
"Scott's Emulsion"—Scott & Bowne, 409 Pearl street, New York, N. Y.
Wright's Indian Vegetable Pill Co., New York, N. Y.

Certainly the fight being made against the scab Los Angeles Times is the fight of every union man and union woman, no matter where located.

Will you help in this fight by writing one letter to each of the above ten advertisers?

Typographical Union, No. 2, of Philadelphia, has obtained an injunction restraining certain city officials from having the assessor's lists printed in non-union offices.

The long fight between the Granite Cutters' National Union and the Maryland Granite Company, of Baltimore, has ended with a victory for the union. The strike began July 9.

Los Angeles Pressmen Strike.

Los Angeles job pressmen are out on a strike. They demand the following scale of prices: On platen presses, $15 to $18 per week and $1 for each additional platen press; on cylinders, $18 to $21; foremen, $24 to $25. This is 10 per cent higher than they have been receiving, but the heavy advance in prices for living has rendered it necessary to ddmand higher wages. The town being well organized, it is almost certain they will win out.

THE TRADES UNIONIST.

OFFICIAL ORGAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION, WASHINGTON BRANCH, AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR.

Vol. VII. No. 47. WASHINGTON, D. C., THURSDAY, MAY 7, 1903. Price, 3 Cents.

QUEEN CITY OF THE PLAINS

A Washingtonian Pays Tribute to the Beauties of the City of Denver.

OZONE AND SUNSHINE AS A DIET

Topography and Population—The Mecca for Sports—Business Houses of Standing—The Newspapers and Their Employees—Advice to Victims of Tuberculosis.

DENVER, COLO., April 30, 1903.
EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Having now put in about two months in Denver, and becoming a pretty fair "float resident," I feel competent to give a few brief and impartial observations on the "City of the Plains," having had nothing to do but get out daily and secure my pro rata of Colorado's health-restoring ozone and sunshine—her greatest boons.

Denver is pleasantly situated in the northeastern part of Colorado, on the Platte River, which to my eye has the appearance of an abandoned canal ditch. The city is somewhat high-minded, being located 5,197 feet above the sea level, and it claims 150,000 souls; as usual, several thousands more than our inaccurate Federal Census credits her with. Here is located the State Capitol, in which the legislature, consisting of about one hundred members—thirty five senators and sixty-five representatives—hold their sessions. These most august bodies labor hard and zealously in the interests of the people ninety days biennially at $7 00 per diem. Here, too, may be seen a member of the gentler sex who holds a seat therein, a living example of woman's rights carried out.

The business or mercantile part of this city is something that the East might well imitate. All stores are large, roomy, well lighted by sunlight, and all appointments the finest. There are few, if any, stores or mercantile houses which handle second-class or shoddy goods. Everything is of the first-class; hence the seemingly high price of goods and provisions.

The streets are wide, conspicuously named at the crossings, clean, and well kept.

The theaters and saloons (side and back door) are open Sundays, and gambling houses of both unknown and wide reputations flourish in profusion. In this line I would state to those with the "propensity to the craze" about "the Swamp" and divers other sections that here is a place where you can "transfer or drop your dough" more quickly than in any get-rich-quick plan yet known.

There are four daily newspapers published here—The Rocky Mountain News, the Denver Republican, the Denver Times, and the Denver Post, the first two named being morning sheets and the last two evening papers. The pay roll of the Rocky Mountain News, carries the name of J. W. Foley, machine operator, and William Waters, ad man, both well known Washington boys. The Times is under the same management as the News, and here in the proofroom may be found William E. Shields, a former president of Columbia Union. Besides these dailies there are several weekly papers, among which is The Colorado Chronicle, a labor paper, the editors, Messrs. Thum & Coates, both being advocates of "an injury to one is the concern of all" from a union standpoint. Mr. Coates is a former Lieutenant-Governor of this State. A number of book and job offices complete the printing establishments.

The thoroughfares here are plentifully interspersed with well-appointed thirst parlors and drink emporiums, but drunkenness is noticeable by its absence. The "mountain dew" and other alcoholic "dope" have a tendency to soon wind up one's little ball of yarn. This, no doubt, is due to the combined action of the "vile stuff" and the altitude upon the heart.

There are a number of banks here, and from the massive appearance of the buildings so occupied I would judge they were safe, solid, and are permanent fixtures.

There are several fine hotels whose inside grandeur, complete appointments, and high rates can not be surpassed anywhere in this country. To name them would make it appear I had possibly stopped a day or so at each, but must say such is not the case.

As Washington has been known for decades as the city of boarding houses, so might this place be known as one of restaurants and eating houses—in all of which you take a chance.

Many churches lift their spires and steeples toward the sky and impress the stranger that this is a devout and sanctimonious city. Perhaps it is, but with a limited police force order is well maintained, save now and then a man is killed or a hold-up takes place just to break the monotony.

All in all Denver is a dead sporty town, and you can get anything you want save work. Besides Denver's quota of unemployed, which from observation is very large, there are the invalids and tuberculosis victims from the East who have "run their little run," exhausted their money, and are looking for employment of some kind to meet expenses until they may ultimately recover and return East. This is a bad condition of affairs, as it places many men in competition with one another to gain a livelihood, naturally keeps wages low, and leads many to realize that this beautiful Queen City of the Plains is a place of never-realized anticipations and shattered hopes. Now, I do not want to be misunderstood in this matter, as union labor here is well organized and the skilled trades are all employed, but when the places are filled the question arises, "How are you going to place two pegs in one hole?" This is the condition of the trades. It is simply a case of some one must step aside and the survival of those strongest—with a "pull."

To my friends I would say that upon the discovery of the first symptoms of the "dread white plague" consult your physician, and if he tells you that there are germs of tuberculosis lurking in your system, pack up, secure car fare, bid your friends and family if needs be, bye, bye, temporarily, cut out the doctor, stop taking "dope" and come to Denver or some other Colorado point and enjoy the God-given ozone and sunshine which puts those little "whip lash" bacilli out of business—if you do not wait too long. Come any how. Do not think of work, but of the excellent chance to "live on borrowed time,' for surely one's life will be prolonged, and most certainly it is better to be alive without a situation, even if you can only enjoy the scenery (and one would certainly grow fat could they eat it), than be dead with a job on one's hands. To believe the above statement one has only to see the number of lung victims who sit daily about the parks, some of the poor unfortunates so pale that the blood seemed to be an entire stranger to their anatomy. In a few days or weeks you notice these same invalids improving, taking on color, rousing from their despondency, and soon passing without dread the crossings of the streets whereon is conspicuously displayed that terrible reminder (to them): "Don't spit on the sidewalk. Bureau of Health." Then again, as you become acquainted you are surprised at the number of acquaintances who tell you that they or some or some of their relatives or friends came from the East for their health years ago, and liked the country so well that they settled down and became residenters. This truly is the place for people with lung troubles—and I know. Lest I ring off, many of my friends and others may suspect me of being interested in some sanitarium or home for consumptives and reaching out for patients.

With kindly regards to all friends whom it was my pleasure to know, I am, yours, on the gain,

A. J. E. HUBBARD.

Why Pay Rent?

BUILDING TRADES COUNCIL.

Strike Averted by the Conservative Action of Unions Represented.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was held at 719 Sixth street northwest, Chairman Meitzler presiding, and E. J. Ratigan acting as secretary.

Roll call disclosed the presence of 26 delegates, representing 15 local unions.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

From Slate and Tile Roofers' Union, No. 11, certifying to Benjamin Russell and Thomas McConaty, vice James Russell and Jacob Parry. Credentials received and the delegates seated.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From L. W. Matter, secretary of Carpenters' District Council, thanking the Council for its efforts in adjusting the difficulty with the George A. Fuller Company.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Delegate Ratigan reported from Central Labor Union.

Entertainment Committee reported the completion of all preliminaries to making the entertainment and dance, to be given at National Rifles' Armory on May 29, a success, and urged all delegates to push the sale of tickets.

Hall Committee reported having four nights vacant of hall on first floor and three nights vacant for small hall.

Business Agent made report of work covered by him during week.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers called attention to the Mathy Company as employing nonunion tinners.

Steam Fitters reported that, notwithstanding all reports to the contrary, the difficulty existing between the Yale Laundry and their union was not settled.

Carpenters stated that all of their employers had acceded to the new scale of prices asked and had declared the lockout off, and that their men would return to work on Wednesday morning.

Hod Carriers stated that nonunion hod carriers were being employed on Hecht's job, and asked that the Business Agent be instructed to use further efforts to have their men employed on that job. It was so ordered.

Considerable time was devoted to the "good and welfare of the Council," after which the Council adjourned.

The National Buscuit Company.

The undersigned desires to call attention to a matter that has long been dormant in this locality without a voice being raised in its behalf.

It is well known by all well-versed trades unionists that the National Biscuit Company (which is a trust of considerable proportions) was placed on the unfair list of organized labor by the American Federation of Labor some few years ago and has yearly been renewed. Were it not for the lack of interest shown by the organized workers throughout the country that firm would long ago have been forced to seek an adjustment.

This state of affairs however should not now exist for the Journeymen Bakers and Confectioners' International Union at its convention last month decided to take up this fight in earnest and force the issue.

Local Bakers' Union No. 118 will take the initiative and lead the fight in this city, and requests the co-operation of all unions, as it requires no further action on behalf of the Central Labor Union, it having been made a national issue.

All that remains to be done is to urge all members of organized labor to refrain from buying the product of the National Biscuit Company.

JOHN G. SCHMIDT,
Bakers' Union, No. 118.

Bricklayers' Executive Committee.

The following is the list of members of the Executive Committee of Bricklayers' Union, No. 1: John G. Wolfe, chairman, 1023 New Jersey avenue; W. Cronin, 1415 Thirty-sixth street northwest; Samuel Haslett, 221 South Lee street, Alexandria, Va.; John Shanahan, 2352 Eighth street northwest; John McCarten, 1237 Maryland avenue northeast.

I see that our fellow-craftsman, J. F. McCormick, has entered the real estate and insurance business. That he has the good wishes of all goes without saying.

To spit or not to spit; that is the question. Whether it were better to bear the scorn of others and pay the penalty or let 'er go, Gallagher—ah, there's the rub!

I have not seen any explanation for the regulation which compels the hand street-sweepers to appear in white uniform. If it is a recognition of the dignity of labor we can afford to let the style go unchallenged.

Sam English, of the "Spess," is about to let the contract for a three-story flat in the vicinity of Capitol Hill. Now that he has made a success of life and is no danger of a relapse, there is no harm in saying that Sam was as poor as I am less than half a century ago.

Mr. Carnegie's latest feat of self-abnegation manifested itself by a resolution to refrain from all work on the Sabbath. This will allow time for his calloused hands to soften and perhaps relieve him of the writers' cramp, brought on by signing checks in aid of charity.

For a few days Commissioner Macfarland appeared undecided whether or not he should accept the proffered second term; but while apparently hesitating it was observed that he never once took his eyes off the gang-plank, and his final decision showed that he had no notion of monkeying with the time limit.

The Indian Office has entered upon the task of further Americanizing the red man by taking from him his original name by substituting something that will do just as well and at the same time look better in print, and this in defiance of the admonition of the lamented Shakespeare, who made the important discovery that to take from one his good name is the worst thing that could happen. There may be less of euphony in "Shacknasty Jim" or "Hole-in-the-Snow" than in J. Cæsar Burrows, J. Ham. Lewis, J. Pierpont Morgan, or any one of the other J's as a name, but, Mr. Secretary, the poor Indian will think you funny, and will never forgive you because of the trouble you make him.

The Union Label.

For the benefit of those who were duped into believing that the Yale Laundry had settled its differences with organized labor, I would respectfully ask them to look up the unfair list published weekly in THE TRADES UNIONIST. Furthermore, regarding the securing of the union label in custom-made clothing, you can get this label in many of the shops in Washington. The tailors are fighting for recognition, and when we demand the label we help win their fight. I have been asked of late regarding the trouble with several firms. In answer I wish to state that the tailors are managing their affairs, and the label is our affair. Go where you can get it.

W. C. PARRY,
Delegate to Central Labor Union.

Postum Cereal Not a Nutrient.

According to a statement made in the Washington Star, May 2, 1903, the chemists of the United States Department of Agriculture, after an extensive investigation into the merits of food articles, declare that cereal substitutes for coffee do not possess the qualities claimed for them.

This is interesting when considered in connection with the fact that Mr. C. W. Post, an advertiser in the Los Angeles Times, and a self-declared enemy to unionism, manufactures one of these substitutes, namely, Postum Cereal.

IN DREAMLAND.

"Handy Andy" Makes a Diagnosis of Dreams of Lord Count Courtney.

Pharaoh, we are told, saw visions of impending calamities in his dreams, and Joseph interpreted them for him; Belshazzar and his guests saw handwriting on the wall in the banquet hall, and Daniel read the flaming inscription, but Earl Count Courtney, alias Charles V. Barton, goes Pharaoh and old Belshazzar one better by holding down both jobs, dreamer and interpreter.

"Earl Count Courtney," alias Barton—I don't know which is his Bertillion name—claims to use no stimulant or dope of any kind in preparation for his noctural wrestles with Morpheus, just a mouthful of pure water and about two grains hydragyri chloridi miti, "now I lay me down to sleep," and—there you are. Some spirit power, some mystic combination which this modern Pharaoh does not care to reveal does the rest—it works while he sleeps. Mr. Barton wants it distinctly understood that he is a printer by trade, but he hasn't worked at it since he took up the profession of dreaming. He is at present engaged in the electrical department of the G. P. O. in a somewhat similar capacity as the youth who has charge of the shoe department of a barber shop. Whatever may be thought of Mr. Barton's dreams by those upon whom he springs them, there is no doubt whatever that he believes them, and cites as proof of the truthfulness of his revelations a dream in which he saw the battleship Maine destroyed six weeks before it actually happened, and came all the way from Seattle to tell President McKinley not to go to Buffalo, for he plainly saw him slain in one of his dreams. Now, as a matter of fact, I know don't whether he dreamed that he dreamed these things or whether he really did dream them, but to prove the truthfulness of his latest hallucination I will tell it here as he repeated it to me. It's a bug-house dream all right. Here's where we back off the dump:

"It was on the night of April 6 that this dreamer, reposing in cherub slumber on his downy couch, saw a beautiful woman, resplendent in gorgeous raiment—a la Redfern—coasting down one side of a fleecy cloud on an ordinary hand sled. At the end of this cloud she struck a thank-you-mam and slid down the chimney of the furnished-room house, No. 416 H street northwest, landing with a dull thud at the side of the white-enameled trundle bed occupied by this modern Pharaoh. In her left hand she bore a bag which she gave to the dreamer. Then he felt like a youth whom Santa Claus had sent his daughter to supply with Xmas gifts, and he eagerly seized the bag and drew forth from its interior all sorts of toy houses, which he placed in villages on the counterpane. From the belfrys of the tiny churches he could hear the bells ringing, some in joyous strains, others in mournful knells. Then he found a little White House, and he placed that in a prominent position, and then the Capitol, emanating from which was a buzzing sound. He shook it, and from its portals came rolling out hundreds of ants all clad in dress suits.

"'You haven't done much this session,' said the dreamer, as the ants scampered about. So he brushed them into the ash barrel which the young lady had thoughtfully rolled up to his bedside. One ant clung to the Capitol steps, and, upon scrutinizing him carefully, the dreamer recognized the features of Representative Cushman, who promised us a speech that would be so warm it would have to be printed on asbestos.

"'I can't put you in the ash barrel,' mused the dreamer, 'because you got me my job.' So he tucked him back in one of the committee rooms. Just then he espied another ant near the Capitol and close to a flower bed in which crocusses and roses formed the letters A. J., and suddenly a path of beautiful roses appeared to grow from the Capitol to the White House, and the little ant was in the path walking as proud as a peacock toward the Executive Mansion. There the lady pulled her toboggan up the cloud and the dreamer fell into a coma that was restful and without incident."

Now for the sequel, the interpretation, the handwriting on the wall. Mr. Barton says he truly believes the young ant was Mr W. R. Hearst, as indicated by the letters A. J (American-Journal), and that he will be the next occupant of the White House. Now, all you dreamers get together and smoke up. Here's where the car stops.

The "Spess" certainly is an eccentric room. We lately had an owl as an inhabitant, and then a pigeon, but then the work is strenuous and human nature fallible.

Mr. J. W. Butler received a telegram Monday stating his mother had passed away. The sympathy of the members of this division is extended to him in his bereavement.

I recently saw a war dance and Indian marriage ceremony by real Indians. Seltese Tribe of Red Men gave the entertainment. John Napoleon, a huge Indian Chief, figured in the dance. He is well educated and has a pretty schoolteacher for a wife.

A publication devoted to the interests of labor deserves support. Were it not for such literature we would be back in the dark ages. Logically a labor paper upholds the Union, to the Union we are indebted for better wages, and to the men who created the Union we are under obligations.

The death of Jack Towers was a surprise and a shock to this division. He had been on the ailing list for a long time, but his death was unexpected. Jack was noted for his wit and humor, and his absence from the proof room where he held a position as copy holder will be regretted.

That is a good story Mr. Fletcher, of the proof-room tells. It seems a gentlemen residing at Langdon left his two children in charge of affairs for the day. Along came two dog catchers, and the children's pet animals being in danger they devised ways and means to escape the dog men's snare, so a dog with a tag on was let loose which the dog catchers at once proceeded to chase. Then the two juveniles opened the cage of the catchers' vehicle and out scampered 40 canines.

Building Trades Entertainment.

The committee in charge of the entertainment to be given at National Rifles' Armory, Friday evening, May 29, under the auspices of the Council of Allied Building Trades, report that the entertainment will be a decided success socially, as all the arrangements point to an evening of fun and enjoyment. The Empire Vaudeville Company will have full charge of the stage on that occasion, which insures an entertainment that will be clean and pleasing. The committee asks the members of affiliated unions to assist in making the affair a financial success.

I would as soon think of doing business without clerks as without advertising.
—JOHN WANAMAKER.

Nothing, except the mint, can make money without advertising.

When you pay more for the rent of your business house than for advertising your business, you are pursuing a false policy. If you can do business, let it be known.

Alleged Wit and Humor.

The following is a sample of the wit that alleged humorists in Puck indulge in at the expense of the unions:

Once upon a time a man was waited on by a committee and ordered to quit work.

"But why?" asked the man.

"Because you do not belong to a labor union," replied the committee, courteously.

"Oh! Very well," said the man and quit, for he was not at all an unreasonable fellow.

The next day the man was waited on by another committee and ordered to go to work.

"But why?" asked the man.

"Because you do not belong to the union of the unemployed," replied the committee, frankly.

"Oh! Very well," said the man; yet all the while he was wondering what he should do.

And yet we are supposed to stand for all this veiled "knocking" because it comes under the head of wit and humor. This anti-union publication circulates extensively in establishments where the wage-earner leaves a portion of his earnings, and its advertising columns are filled with advertisements that appeal to the wage-earner. If Puck has nothing in common with the wage-earner let the latter give Puck and its supporters a wide berth.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

John V. R. Towers, for many years a copyholder on Specifications, who died on Friday of last week, was one of the most genial-dispositioned men I have ever known. Though long a sufferer with the dread consumption which finally conquered his bodily strength, he was always sunny and good-natured, with a smile and a jest for every one. He was a member of a family remarkable in many respects, and especially for the number of its members connected with printing. I am rather poorly equipped to give anything like a correct history of the family, but I have known quite a number of them. John T. Towers, an uncle of deceased, was Superintendent of Public Printing in 1852 and 1853, and was afterwards Mayor of the city. William Towers, another uncle, was chief clerk of public printing from 1852 to 1868, and was afterwards a proofreader until he died, about 1883. William H. Towers, a son of the preceding, was for a number of years foreman of the Daily Chronicle and for another period of its job room. Later he was in charge of what became known as the Second Division of the G. P. O., then foreman of the National Republican until its discontinuance, and is now a proofreader in the G. P. O. Two of his sons, David I. and Mark, are printers, though the former gave up the business long ago to become a theatrical manager. W. Scott Towers, who, I believe, is not a printer, but for a considerable time business manager of the old Republican and now in charge of Branch C of the city post-office, is a brother of William H. Towers.

Don't question the merits of the case when a labor organization places a business man, firm, or company under the ban. If each is to decide for himself, concerted action is impossible.

"I suppose you fellows are going to do the right thing by Edgar Meritt," said an insinuating, nervous gentleman.

"If you mean by 'the right thing' that we should vote for him," I answered, coldly, a little nettled at the implied suspicion, "I think you may keep your shirt on. He will probably get every vote."

"I hope to keep my shirt on if the campaign does not get too hot," he answered with a shade of vexation at the cavalierly way in which I had replied.

* * * *

"Joe Babcock will get a big vote among you fellers, won't he?" asked one of those people whom you can not always avoid.

"The gentlemen of the Proof Room have the warmest friendship and greatest admiration for Mr. Babcock and will undoubtedly vote for him," I answered with studious politeness.

"That's the only thing I know against Joe—that he used to be a proofreader. But he's been reformed long enough for that to be overlooked," and the vulgar creature shuffled away to find some of his own kind.

* * * *

"Jack Purvis is a sure thing, and don't you forget it," said a warm admirer. "How will he run in the Proof Room?"

"The Proof Room is his stronghold, outside of his own division," I replied; "that is, one of his strongholds, for he seems very strong everywhere."

"That's what he is," said my friend. "His name is Jack Rabbit Purvis, and he can outrun an express train, and he's doing it now," and he jerked his thumb toward a hostelry, to learn the object of which I accompanied him.

* * * *

"O'Donnell will do even better than he did last year, won't he?" asked a cold, gray-eyed man.

"Of course he will," I responded, a little indignantly. "He was defeated last year, but this year he will lead the ticket."

"That agrees with my diagnosis, and I'm with you in supporting him," said he, and he gently led me into a place where they don't sell pump water.

* * * *

"Onyun is about the strongest man in the field," said a Night Bill man.

"Mr. Onyun will unquestionably get a very large vote and be elected," I answered, quietly ignoring his disgusting joke.

"He wouldn't want the secret to leek out that his favorite song is 'On Yonder Rock Reclining,' I guess," he said, as he proceeded to remove his cigar, lick his lips, and grin, and before I killed him he went away.

* * * *

"Joe Stelle is my man and I'm doing all I can for him," said a man to give whose name might unduly prejudice other candidates' chances.

"You have no monopoly in that," I answered. "We're all for Stelle, and there is no danger of his being defeated."

"I knew you were all right for Joe," said he, "and with your influence behind him he can't lose. I will be gratified," he continued, "if you will take a little lunch with me at the Raleigh this evening."

* * * *

"How do you stand on Fitzwilliam?" blurted a longhorn-voiced Texan, with cactus-like polish, into my sensitive ear.

"Mr. Fitzwilliam has my entire and undivided support," I replied, as I turned my head away to avoid his breath.

"Fitz is a heap big Injun—eat dogs and chaw sagebrush. You stack your yaller metal on him! He's there now! Come and soak your alkali dust!" and rather than hurt him I went.

* * * *

"How does the night force stand on Stretton?" I was asked the other day by a man whose wink is worth more than an ordinary man's ten-minute speech.

"Solid to the man, I think," I answered. "I can't think of any one whose vote will approach his."

"Well, you do well to get into the procession. We have got him elected safe enough, but there's nothing like clinching it. Come and bite off one," and not knowing what he meant, I went.

* * * *

"Is Rodier going to do anything among you fellows?" asked a downtown man.

"I never saw the demand so general before. He is unquestionably an easy winner," I replied, with a tone that would not brook questioning my judgment.

"Well, if he runs in the G. P. O. like he will downtown the delegateship won't be left in the lurch," and he offensively smirked as he put the heel of his number nine on my big toe, and, turning on it, left me.

* * * *

"Frank Lerch will get a big vote in the Swamp, won't he?" modestly asked an apparent supporter.

"Lerch is as safe as if he had the certificate in his pocket," I answered in my customary graceful way.

"Oh, I've had no doubts on the subject, but a fellow likes to be reassured, you know," said he, as he handed me the cigar that my gentlemanly appearance prompted him to tender.

* * * *

"Who's going to be elected vice-president?" asked a literary-looking man on North Capitol street.

"I really don't know, and I don't care, Adam," said I, in a voice choked with emotion.

"Shake! Neither do I," said Mr. Bugg, as he made a run to head off the timekeeper.

Sweet Chlotildy tried to gibe me, in his notes from First Division, in the columns of this paper, on my recent modest lessons on a few pronunciations; but my thick hide turns his arrows as a duck's back sheds the water. In accomplishing my mission I have partially succeeded, for a good friend I have broken of the daily, hourly habit of it calling "adver*tise*ment."

* * * *

J. F. McCormick is now a hustling real estate man, and I predict for him a successful career, for he is of the right temperament and has the persistence and energy necessary in that or any other business. It won't do to apply to any kind of business what might be called "green-corn business principles," based on the story of the country lad who was sent to town by his people to sell a bag of "roasting ears." Returning at night with his bag still full, he was asked:

"Couldn't you sell any green corn?"

"Didn't nobody say nothing to me 'bout no green corn. One feller asked what I had in my bag, but I told him it was none of his d—d business."

Rotten old chestnut, but it's good, isn't it?

* * * *

Jokes are dangerous things to fool with unless you are perfectly reckless of consequences or have nothing at stake. There are some people so devoid of humor that they accept as solemn facts the most ridiculous and farcical stories, of which the "Room 160" story, connected with one of the candidates, is a specimen, though it is hard to conceive an intellect which would be deceived by it.

William S. Waudby is progressing grandly in his campaign for the Commissionership of Labor, and has been indorsed by 4 international unions, 29 typographical unions, 20 miscellaneous unions, 9 central labor unions, 6 allied printing trades councils, and over 50 individuals, consisting of Senator Depew, Representatives W. O. Smith and J. B. Perkins, and men noted in almost all walks in life. For his good work in the Bureau of Labor and in the interest of workingmen Mr. Waudby deserves this recognition at the hands of the President.

* * * *

Next Monday is the birthday of the National Union, and will be that of the new council Joseph Dierken is founding. If you are not a member of this best of insurance orders, you ought to be.

* * * *

Colonel Monroe, in the Sunday Post, becomes more delightful from week to week. What a library of good things that paper is, any way! I have some acquaintance with all the great papers, and I do not know another which shows such careful editing, judicious selection, or appreciation of the public taste.

* * * *

I am sorry to see so much bitterness exhibited in the contest for the downtown delegateship, for I feel sure that the interests of the union will be perfectly safe in the hands of either Mr. Lerch or Mr. Rodier. Neither will attempt to secure legislation adverse to the sense of the union which he represents, emphatically expressed on more than one occasion in regard to some matters, and neither will have any personal axes to grind or grievances to avenge. Let us all be real good.

* * * *

Union-label cigars are to be found everywhere now, and the tobacconist never says, "I don't know what you mean," when you demand them. But my principles force me down to the 5-cent variety, as the more expensive ones never bear the label.

* * * *

The campaign has been two weeks on and the election is but two weeks off, and mighty little is doing so far. I've seen quite a bunch of candidates, but I haven't been directly panhandled for my vote as yet. It begins to look like the aspirants place some confidence in the voter's ability to make his own selections.

* * * *

I'd like to write an item about how miserably bleak and cold it is; but the chances are that by the time it is published it will be hot enough to even make Jack Connolly lay off his overcoat.

* * * *

The Navy-Yard mechanics do a good deal of whining about not being treated as well as other artisan employees of the Government, but until they enroll themselves in the unions in sufficient numbers to compel respect for themselves they never will receive recognition. A hundred men organized as soldiers can put a mob of 10,000 to flight, and the potency of organization among laboring men is as great as in the case just cited. Make yourselves worthy of recognition and you will be recognized.

* * * *

It is with great sorrow that his many friends will learn of the death of Grant E. Price, of the Fifth Division, at Pasadena, Cal. on Teesday last. The body will be taken to Indiana for interment. Mr. Price was a most companionable, genial gentlemen, and one who will long be missed.

* * * *

Employers of unfair men usually pay them approximately as much as union men receive in the same locality, or they could not keep them at all. Thus the unfair man profits by the efforts of the union while doing all in his power to thwart it.

* * * *

Seeing other mechanics getting from $3.50 to $5 00 per day must be a little galling to the Navy-Yard men, whose wages run from $2.68 to $3.20, with foremen receiving as little as $3.44. But these trades outside of the yard have unions and belong to them, and are not afraid to demand what they ought to have.

* * * *

Colonel Parry wants to organize the non-union men. Go ahead, Colonel, and when you have taught them the first grand principle of community of interest they will go into the labor unions as naturally as ducks into a pond.

* * * *

We are going to have this year not only the greatest convention, but the greatest delegation in union history. Want to know who they are? Read the answer between the stars.

* * * *

Charlie Leeds, Nelson P. Moyer, and one or two others are wearing pins labeled "C. D. 18 Pa." It is their way of identifying themselves politically. The Congressional districts of Pennsylvania have been juggled so often since they have been away from there that most of the time they did not know in what district they belonged. Finding out, they labeled themselves, the tags signifying "Congressional District 18, Pennsylvania."

Mr. John W. Bramwood, secretary-treasurer of the I. T. U., made a visit to the big printing office on Monday. He was so busy shaking hands with old and new friends that no one had more than a few words with him, being in tow of Secretary Garrett, Treasurer Berg, and Editor Patton. He was looking his best and was on his return from a trip to Boston.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

David Pollock and W. H. Van Bibber have caught on with the Stone Printing Company, of Roanoke, Va.

B. L. Stidham, late of the Night Bill Force, has left for Texas to embark in the newspaper business. He has the best wishes of his many friends in this city.

Hindman Doxey, recently employed as a compositor in the G. P. O., left Monday evening for Roanoke, Va., where he will be employed by the Stone Printing Company.

Chas. W. Thompson, foreman of the Post, made a flying visit to New York City and Newark this week in the interest of the Convention Committee of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101.

Frank Morrison, Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, returned to the city Wednesday after an absence of two weeks in attendance at the Executive Board meeting of the A. F. of L. at Toronto, Canada.

George P. Nichols, of Baltimore, was a visitor to the city last Monday. Mr. Nichols reports the canvass for local affairs in Baltimore Union as being quiet. He is to be one of the delegates to the coming I. T. U. convention in this city next August.

Chas. E. Hawkes, First Vice President of the International Typographical Union, was in the city during the past week, en route to Chicago. Mr. Hawkes has been visiting the East, taking his vacation on account of his health, and is much improved.

J. Monroe Kreiter, of the Post, has a well-written article in the May number of the Typographical Journal that will bear perusal by residents of this city. It treats of the many attractions of Washington to the visitor, and especially for the visitors to this city during the coming I. T. U. convention next August. Mr. Kreiter wields a facile pen and is a good descriptive writer.

Arthur F. ("Pard") Bloomer has an exhaustive article on Government publications in the Inland Printer. It is written in a vein entirely foreign to this graceful and versatile writer, the article being somewhat statistical, showing the variety and nature of the publications issued through the various bureaus of the Government. It is valuable to the student, as it is a compilation of works on a variety of subjects, treating of agriculture, ethnology, ichthyology, foreign commerce, the Census, and other interesting topics to the bibliophile.

First Division.

A. H. McKnight went to Philadelphia last Monday to attend the funeral of his wife's brother.

J. E. Bright, our genial make-up, has gone off for a month's leave, and J. C. Lesher is acting in his place.

Harry E. Giles and E. E. Coates were transferred from the Job Room to this division during the past week.

Elmer E. Schooley has quite a collection of pictures made from the candidates' cards. It will pay you to go see them.

W. S. Taylor has returned from a ten-days' vacation and will be pleased to receive challenges for a contest with any one who thinks he can pitch quoits.

George W. Schaffer was called suddenly home, Little Falls, N. Y., as his father had died from heart disease. Mr. Schaffer has the sympathy of the entire room.

Messrs. Miller and Nachman beat Messrs. Robinson and Heisler three straight games of bowling last Tuesday night for the championship of the First Division.

By the time this paper comes out George W. Wetmore will have returned, and the affairs at the "dead board" will once more participate in the routine of the shop.

Will L. Mattox received his regular appointment last Tuesday and immediately applied for thirty-days' leave of absence, which was granted. He will take a trip to Boston by sea.

T. J. Fitzwilliam, one of the Job Room candidates, won a box of cigars last week for making the highest score at bowling. His score was 257. That secures Mr. Fitzwilliam the bowler vote.

Count Courtney, the dreamer, has formed a dream club in the Second Division. He stated that he could not get one started in any other division, but had no trouble in the Second. Strange, aint it?

There will be a great bowling tournament between teams representing the First, Second, Third, Job, and Record rooms, commencing this evening at the Rathskeller, Eighth and E streets northwest, at 7:30 p. m.

George Ellis has announced himself as a candidate for teller at the coming election. Vote for George and land a winner. Among the other names mentioned for tellers are William H. Drayton and T. Frank Morgan.

The following cry has been adopted by the champion bowling team of the Second Division:

Rah! Rah! Rah!
Champions are we;
Goodkey, Goodkey, Goodkey,
Of the Second D. I. V.

George Ackerman, an old employee, who worked in this room about sixteen years ago on the S.-G. Catalogue, but now a proofreader on the New York Times, paid us a visit last Monday and renewed acquaintances with some of the old-timers.

Second Division.

Mr. W. D. Morgan's little son, who has been sick about two weeks, is very much improved.

Mr. Frank R. McFadyen, of North Carolina, has been on the sick list for several half days.

A draft makes Sparks fly ——, but the only draughts he cares for is a few games at lunch time.

Mr. George L. Sherman, the affable assistant foreman, is enjoying seventeen days' leave of absence.

One hundred per cent of attendance was the timekeeper's report for the Second on Monday morning.

Farmer E. J. Wood got stung badly on the eyelid Saturday while working with his beehives. He brought a swelled face to work Monday.

National Guard Comrade E. N. Bunker was transferred to this division from the Job Room Tuesday. He was assigned to slug 44 in Financial Alley.

Mr. W. N. Goldstein is "planning" a European tour for part of his summer vacation. In the fall he intends to take in the G. A. R. encampment at San Francisco.

Mr. Clyde G. Hopkins writes from McEwen, Tenn., that he is improving slowly. The limit of absence having expired, he was dropped from the rolls. Mr. C. F. Cooke is now on slug 20.

Col. H. F. J. Drake, this chapel's permanent and efficient secretary, has near his frame a formidable looking club, hung by a golden chain, and an imitation policeman's badge. The Colonel collects all chapel fines.

Mr. W. R. Branham, of Georgia, is going to New York City May 30. His friends are very solicitous about his safety. He is not familiar with the ways of large cities and is taking note of all the expert advice offered him.

Several members of this chapel bought tickets for the banquet in honor of Secretary Bramwood. It has been suggested that "Tip" Hoy would have provided a spread for 25 cents a plate—and it would seem more like old times to many.

Whenever the race for delegate is discussed there is no doubt expressed as to Edgar Meritt's position on the ticket—always first. Why? Because nearly everybody is going to vote for him. All his friends are pulling for him, and they are legion.

Until "Doc." Scanlon came on the scene we were very proud of our Mr. Bright as a disciple of the histrionic art. Their alley mates say "Doc." has him beat a little on Shakespeare. Scanlon is trying to persuade Bright to abanbon vaudeville and take up the legitimate.

Some members of this union who wrote remonstrating letters to advertisers in the Los Angeles Times, received letters from the H. O. Company, manufacturers of "H. O." and "Force," saying they had "discontinued their advertising in that paper and hoped no further complaint could be found against them." This is in marked contrast to the attitude of Mr. Post, maker of "Grape Nuts" and "Postum."

Henry J. Frank, a temporary during the rush of work, has returned to the storeroom of the G. P. O.

E. F. Geyer was promoted to the ring alley last week, and C. E. Morton was advanced to chief ringman.

Chairman Dietrich was out with the District Militia last Monday to attend the obsequies of former Governor Shepherd.

Geo. H. Healey, Edw. E. Connor, F. E. Klopfer, A. F. Martin, C. P. Boss, Stephen B. Tilley, and John J. Quinn received their regular appointments.

Charles F. Purdy, formerly in this room but now in the First, exercised his ingenuity as stage manager at the Wimodaughsis entertainment last Monday night.

Wm. M. Hamilton received an addition to his household some days ago in the shape of twenty-three chicks. He set a hen with fourteen eggs, and can not account for the extra nine peepers. There were no other hens on the place.

"The cause of labor, rightly understood, is the cause of humanity," said Bishop Spalding, of the Coal Strike Commission, at the Coliseum (Peoria, Ill.) on the 1st inst. "The history of trades unionism is largely the history of beneficence."

Grant E. Price, late a member of this chapel and who went to California last January on account of ill health, died in Los Angeles last Tuesday. He will be taken to his home in Indiana for interment. Mr. Price had many friends in the printing office.

Of the 225 prints accepted by the Capital City Camera Club for their twelfth annual exhibition, which opened last Monday for a week at the Corcoran Art Gallery, five are the production of Charles H. Leighton, of this division. Both the Star and the Post, in their reviews of the society's work, gave him special mention, the former being partial to the work entitled "Mauch Chunk Creek," while the latter singled out "A Summer Shower." Those who have seen various specimens of Mr. Leighton's work place him in the front rank of camera artists.

The I. T. U. Convention.

John W. Bramwood, secretary of the International Typographical Union, has been in the city during this week making arrangements for holding the next convention of the I. T. U. The convention will be held at Columbia Theater the week of August 10 to 15, and headquarters have been secured at the Ebbitt House, where a rate of $2.50 per day will be made to all delegates and visitors to the convention. The selection of the place for the convention and headquarters are considered the best obtainable and will meet every want desired.

Mr. Bramwood will be the guest of members of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, through the convention committee of that Union, at a reception to be tendered him this evening at the Ebbitt House. He will leave to-morrow (Friday) for his home at Indianapolis.

The scarcity of British seamen is attributed to the fact that whereas Germany makes a demand upon a population of 46,000,000, Great Britain has only 40,000,000 from which to draw seamen.

Bindery Notes.

Jim Nally sent to New York for some new socks. They are the hottest that ever walked the pike.

Hon Thomas Songster has been suffering of late in the mornings with dyspepsia. We recommend the hot water cure.

Charlie Mattimore was out walking with his little boy Sunday when they met Pop Burns. Pop, who is a good natured fellow, presented the boy with one peanut. The little boy smiled and said, "Papa aint that a reckless man."

Sam Kookagy, president of the Liquid Air Co., expects some day to receive an appointment as weather prophet for the Government. He feels the change of weather in his bones, looks wise and tells the binders, "Rain sure tonight or tomorrow."

Mr. Robert Glocking, First Vice President of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, was in our city last week as delegate to the convention of Chiefs of Labor Bureaus. During his stay he was the guest of Mr. J. A. B. Espey. The delegates visited Baltimore, at the invitation of Commissioner Smith, of the Maryland Bureau. Upon that trip J. A. B. Espey and W. B. Hyde, accompanied the delegation as guests of Mr. Glocking.

Bill Lang (alias "Bones") was invited by a very pretty young lady in the Bindery to call on her. Bill sent his white vest to the laundry, had it starched, bought a bottle of shoe polish, and went to a swell barber and got a haircut and shave; eat a package of Sen Sen, and with a flower in his button-hole, started to visit as he called her, "his Little Peach." Bill, looking like a member of the Sugar Trust, arrived at the lady's house, rang the bell a number of times and received no answer. A window was raised next door and some person informed Bill that the sign on the premises read "FOR RENT."

Cow Boy.

John Dwyer has had his name neatly painted on one of the bindery trucks. No strenuous life for John.

Harry Figg and Al. Eshleman have taken apartments together. It is difficult to say whom to congratulate or with whom to condole.

Gus Bauer and Sam Childs were a little late getting to work Tuesday morning with some of the other Baltimoreans, and it was hinted they were holding out for a higher price for their votes.

Harry Figg announced on Monday that he had shipped a friend to Baltimore. As there was a municipal election in that burg Tuesday it was suspected Harry was trying to swell the vote.

If the correspondence of George Williams increases he will need a secretary, as every mail brings in samples of chicken feathers, photos or frizzes. As a fancier of rare birds George is alone in the "A" class.

"Susan Brown" will doubtless be greatly grieved to learn that Ben Spellbring has again been married. If the new Mrs. Spellbring takes on all the dignity and honors of her husband she can appropriately be called the "Queen of the West." Ben's friends presented him with a beautiful Morris Chair to mark the happy event.

PASTE.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

The meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, which will be held on next Friday evening, May 8, at Typographical Temple, promises to be a most interesting one. Besides the nominations for delegates to the August convention, several important committees will have to be filled. Which notice of the meeting has been sent out to all members of the Auxiliary, any female members of a printer's family who feel interested in the Auxiliary are especially invited to be present. If Friday evening is inconvenient send in your name and it will give you the privilege of voting for the delegates, which will take place at the next regular meeting.

The meetings of the Auxiliary have always proved interesting, and the meeting Friday evening is being looked forward to with a great deal of pleasure.

The members of Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, are always welcome, and no doubt many will again avail themselves of the opportunity.

After the business of the meeting is transacted, an entertainment will take place and dancing will close the evening's enjoyment.

If you have not joined as yet, don't forget to attend the next meeting or send in your name.

Allied Label League reported that a satisfactory settlement had been secured with H. I. Meader.

Building Trades Section reported that an entertainment and dance would be given on Friday evening, May 29, at National Rifles' Hall, for the purpose of securing funds to secure permanent quarters.

Building Trades Section also requested a report from the secretary of the Central Labor Union on communications sent to organizations affiliated with the A. F. of L., relative to their affiliation with the Building Trades Section. Made a special order for Monday evening, May 25. Adjourned.

THE BRAMWOOD RECEPTION.

Ebbitt House the Scene of a Pleasant and Enjoyable Affair.

The reception tendered John W. Bramwood, Secretary-Treasurer of the International Typographical Union, by members of Columbia Typographical Union was a decided success.

Chairman Whitehead, of the Convention Committee, called the assemblage to order and introduced President Joe M. Johnson as toastmaster and chairman of the meeting.

After ample justice had been done to the good things provided for the inner man, President Johnson introduced the guest of the evening, John W. Bramwood, who responded very feelingly at the manner in which he had been treated during his stay in the city, and spoke of the progress of the I.T.U. in the past ten years.

George P. Nichols, the Warwick of Baltimore Union, No. 12, was then presented by the toastmaster as a man who needed no introduction to Washington printers, being as much at home here as in the Monumental City. Mr. Nichols paid a high tribute to the present and past officers of the I. T. U. for the advance of its material interests and assured his hearers that the future of the organization was safe while carried on the lines now laid out by our executive officers.

Mr. August Donath was introduced as one of the old guard in Columbia Union, and made a vigorous and forceful address on the subject of trades unionism, and particularly the I. T. U. Mr. Donath referred to the fact that while he was not an active member of the union his interests were identical with those who were still actively engaged at the printing business and said it was not through any desire on his part that he did not carry an active membership card, but through a law of the local union. He referred to his work as one of the trustees of the Home, and paid a high tribute to the late Amos J. Cummings, who served with him on the first Board of Trustees of the Home.

Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, made a masterful address on the policy pursued by the I. T. U. in the conduct of its affairs, and also desired to be placed on record as indorsing the conservative methods of the International body in the settlement of trade disputes.

T. Frank Hall dwelt on the different conditions of past and present throughout the Missouri River country and gave some interesting reminiscences of life among the "pirates." He closed by predicting for the I. T. U. still greater glory for the future of the organization.

J. H. Babcock made an interesting address on latter day work in the trades-union movement and clearly showed that the conservative force applied to questions at issue in the unions has had its effect in the great number of supporters that have come to the standard of organized labor in the past five years.

W. H. Bailey spoke of the advance in conditions at present over the old-time methods in the days before the Merganthaler relegated so many of the faithful to the rear, and asserted that we might look up the advent of the machine as an unmixed evil, which time has leveled to the betterment of the conditions of the trade, though it has been at the sacrifice of the pioneers in the trade.

During the evening John R. Purvis was called upon and rendered in a capable manner one of his excellent solos. The evening was further enlivened by a solo from John T. Finnegan and the performance of John H. Weidman on the octoreno.

At 12 o'clock the chairman called "30," and the reception and entertainment ended by drinking to the guest of the evening and bidding him bon voyage.

Strike Week in Washington.

Rumors of a strike which have been hovering about this city for the past few months dissolved into thin air when the Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers, Carpenters, Slaters and Paperhangers entered into friendly agreements with their employers and all returned to work.

This to a very great extent should be credited to the Council of Allied Building Trades of Central Labor Union, and the conservativeness on which it conducts business. The majority of organized labor and the public in general have realized the fact that the card of the Council of Allied Building Trades is here to stay, and that the rules govering the use of the card will do more to prevent strikes and lockouts and keep the members carrying the card in a position to earn more money than anything introduced in the building trades of this city. The Council now numbers nineteen organizations and expects to win over three out of the remaining seven in the very near future. The Central Labor Union can assist the Council of Allied Building Trades by a vigorous adherence to its constitution.

Base Ball.

The Pressmen Base Ball Club has organized for the season and desire games with shop and department teams whose players are taken exclusively from the department or shop in which they are employed. Address: William H. Barnholt, Main Pressroom, G. P. O.

Fifth Division.

Lost—Two daggers, by Charles S. Gunn, and H. B. Barnhart, regular appointees in this division. No rewards.

Correction—In last week's issue we inadvertently had C. P. instead of J. G. Boss, among the names of those who recently received regular appointments.

Although election day is very near at hand, the teller race has not been so much as mentioned. We would put in nomination P. M. McCallum and G. E. Partridge.

George Boone was so favorably impressed with the ladies who came down from the Spess last Monday with tickets to sell that we fear he will ask to be transferred to Mr. Ramsey's division.

The Misses Wilson and Whitehead, from the Spess, canvassed this room last Monday with tickets for the Ladies' Auxiliary of Columbia Union for a lawn party to be given at Hyattsville, May 18. Eddie Heidingsfeld assisted the chairman in escorting them through the room.

The Times has added a weekly feature of interest to every one who owns a camera. It offers three prizes, of $5.00, $3 00, and $2 00 each, for the best prints by amateur photographers of the District, and of course that includes the G. P. O. Our camera artists should take notice.

The attempt to form a G. P. O. Base Ball League has met with success. Five teams have been organized as follows: The First Division, Second and Third, Fourth and Fifth, Record Room, and the Job Room. Last Thursday the Fourth and Fifth beat the First, with a score of 11 to 1. To-day the Fourth and Fifth play the Job Room.

Bill Kennedy, of "Ocean," Retires.

William Kennedy, known all over the country in typographical circles, has resigned as foreman of the Chicago Inter-Ocean, after a continuous service on that paper nearly since its foundation. Mr. Kennedy was one of the foremen of the old school and counts his friends by the thousands. Always ready to aid and assist the deserving and unfortunate, Bill Kennedy made friends with all who came in contact with him. He has been a visitor and a representative at many sessions of the I. T. U., having represented Chicago Union at Montreal and Kansas City. With all visitors at conventions Mr. Kennedy is a prime favorite on account of his never failing fund of humor and his kindly manner. It is hoped his health will permit him to visit Washington during the convention here in August.

Entertainment of Building Trades.

The committee in charge of the entertainment to be given Friday, May 29, at National Rifles Armory, for the benefit of the building fund of the Council of Allied Building Trades, have made all arrangements for a clean, pleasant evening's enjoyment. The talent in the entertainment for the evening will be supplied by the Empire Vaudeville Company, and will comprise the 4 Del Rays, in ground and lofty tumbling; Milt. M. Clark, the well known whistler; J. Harry Hanlein, in his own rag-time melodies; the Unique Trio, in a bit of everything; Bond and Boyd, the popular song illustrators, and others. The low price of admission (25 cents) with an entertainment and dance, bids fair to make the hall too small for the crowd that is anticipated by the management.

The B. U. Club is both a matter of interest and comment by reason of its surprising growth, now numbering 550 members. It is fitted throughout with everything that modern ideas can suggest to make it a home of comfort. Situated at 905 E street northwest, the manager, J. J. Crowley, and the secretary, Jere F. McCarthy, are known for their business acumen, while the directors are men of repute. Everything supplied by the club is the best and at lowest prices consistent with quality. Membership is $1 yearly. Secretary Jere F. McCarthy will gladly supply applicants for membership with further particulars.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Considerable Business Transacted at Its Regular Meeting.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order, at 719 Sixth street northwest, by Vice-Chairman L. A. Sheetz, with Secretary Ratigan at his desk.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Roll call disclosed the presence of 23 delegates, representing 14 unions.

CREDENTIALS.

From Washington Lodge of Machinists, No. 193, certifying to J. Hamerstrom and J. H. Burkholder, vice P. B. Gerden and J. V. Clark.

From Local Union No. 883, Brotherhood of Carpenters, certifying to P. W. Walters, vice F. Nolte.

The delegates were seated.

The delegate from Bridge and Structural Iron Workers stated that Thomas Grove had been appointed a delegate from that union, vice W. Newman, but the credentials had been delayed, and asked that the delegate be seated pending receipt of credentials. The request was granted.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Committee from the Central Labor Union reported that the Yale Laundry had been taken from the unfair list; that credentials from the Managing Committee of the Amalgamated Carpenters had been presented and laid on the table. Also that the hour of 9 o'clock of the meeting of May 25 had been set apart as a special order to consider the question of unions in the building line affiliated with the Central Labor Union, but not represented in the Building Trades Section.

The Entertainment Committee reported the perfection of all preliminaries toward making the entertainment and dance a success, and asked that the committee be increased to twenty-five. The request was complied with, and the Chair appointed C. W. Winslow, S. B. Young, P. Loftus, J. Huff, W. Silver, P. W. Walters, H. W. Shuman, J. L. Ainsworth, F. Nelson, T. W. Alvey, J. H. Burkholder, and T. Grove.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Hoisting Engineers delegate reported that a nonunion engineer had his machine at Georgetown Hospital. Referred to Business Agent.

Hod Carriers stated that their men had lost two weeks on the Hecht job, but had started in Monday.

Carpenters asked that the secretary be directed to write the officers of the A. F. of L. for copy of all matters pertaining to the trouble existing between the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America and the Amalgamated Society of Carpenters.

At this point the Sergeant at-Arms stated that a committee representing the Amalgamated Carpenters were outside and desired to address the Council. After considerable debate, it was agreed that the committee be admitted, and the regular order of business was suspended and the committee, through J. D. McKay and W. Gilmore, made their statement, after which the regular order was resumed.

The Steam Fitters reported that a nonunion firm had been given the heating at Georgetown Hospital. Referred to Business Agent.

Under the head of unfinished business the secretary was directed to call a meeting of the Executive Committee to consider agreements presented by the Steam Fitters, Steam Fitters' Helpers, and Hod Carriers.

Considerable time was indulged in discussing the Carpenters' question and as to disciplining organizations whose members failed to attend the meeting of the Central Labor Union.

Adjourned.

WOMAN'S AUXILIARY, NO 101.

Mrs. N. M. McMichael Elected Delegate to National Woman's Auxiliary.

The meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, at Typographical Temple, on last Friday evening, was well attended, the occasion being the nominations for delegate to the convention of the National Woman's Auxiliary, which will be held in this city during the week of the International Typographical Union convention. Owing to the many committees to be filled, the president was given power to appoint all standing committees. After the regular business was transacted, the president announced that nominations were in order for delegate. Several names were placed in nomination, but all declined in favor of Mrs. N. M. McMichael, secretary of the Auxiliary, Mrs. F. C. Roberts being named as alternate. The selection of Mrs. McMichael as delegate to the convention was heartily applauded, she being in every way qualified to represent the Auxiliary.

An interesting discussion then followed on the ways and means for making the lawn fete a success, which, through the courtesy of Mrs. John McCormick, will be held on the lawn at her residence, Hyattsville, Md., next Monday evening, May 18. The committee on sale of tickets have met with gratifying success, and, as the tickets are only 10 cents, the Auxiliary expects to realize quite a snug sum, which will go toward defraying expenses in entertaining their visitors during convention week. A first-class musical programme will be given, and arrangements will be made for dancing. Refreshments will be served and the lawn appropriately decorated.

The Chair announced the following standing committees:

Business Committee—Mrs. Joe M. Johnson, Mrs. Irma D. Palmer, Mrs. Jos. E. Goodkey, Mrs. E. H. Thomas, and Mrs. A. W. Bowen.

Entertainment Committee—Miss Teresa McDonald, Miss Katharine Kidd Spencer, Mrs. T. A. Bynum, Mrs. J. A. Huston, and Mrs. F. C. Roberts.

Relief Committee—Miss Allie Trefts, Mrs. R. E. Stenner, Mrs. Kate Newsom, Mrs. C. L. Nace, and Mrs. J. L. Holland.

Auditing Committee—Mrs. Nellie G. Stagge, Miss Cornelia M. Brown, Mrs. Callie Jacoby, Miss Mamie McCormick, and Mrs. H. J. Redfield.

Rallying Committee—Miss Reith, Miss M. Eisenhour, Miss D. C. Cummins, Mrs. Delos Carter, Mrs. C. H. Slack, and Mrs. Hoyt A. Holton.

The Chair announced the following committees on the lawn fete:

Refreshment Committee—Mrs. A. W. Bowen, Mrs. C. A. Durno, Mrs. J. L. Holland, Mrs. R. E. Stenner, Mrs. I. Walter Sharp, Mrs. Kate Newsom, Mrs. Jack T. Rowe, Mrs. Clair C. Barnes, Mrs. Carrie L. Kidd, Mrs. E. F. Hazel, Mrs. Henry Langdon, Mrs. Chas. W. Burnett, Mrs. Lorenzo C. Hover, Mrs. Arthur J. McMillan, Mrs. C. S. Elder, and Mrs. Geo. F. Halsey.

Entertainment Committee—Mrs. F. C. Roberts, Miss May McMichael, Mrs. R. A. Julian, Miss Mamie McCormick, Miss D. C. Cummins, Mrs. Delos Carter, Mrs. T. E. McCardell, Mrs. E. H. Thomas, Mrs. O. D. Hyler, and Mrs. J. A. Huston.

The trip to Hyattsville can be made either by the Baltimore and Ohio or the City and Suburban Railway. A committee on reception will be present at the stations to direct the guests of the evening to the grounds of Mr. McCormick, which is but a two-minutes' walk from either station.

The committees on entertainment and amusements will meet at Typographical Temple on Friday evening, May 15, at 7.30 o'clock, for the purpose of completing arrangements for the lawn fete.

TOMLIN TELLS THINGS TARTLY

Denver Not a Good Health Resort—Cost of Living Very High—Many Unemployed in the City—Selfishness Very Evident—Pays a Great Tribute to the Printers' Home.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.,
May 5, 1903.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

After a sojourn of some six months in this so-called land of sunshine, it is possible that a resume of my experiences in the search of health may interest your readers. As you know, my exit from Washington was so sudden as to somewhat upset my equilibrium, and the fact is I have not yet recovered from the shock of separation from family and friends.

After a month on the road, I landed in Denver November 1. First impressions of the city were to me disappointing, but on further acquaintance I found it a strictly up-to-date city in every respect, the business houses and streets comparing favorably with the cities of the East. After spending a few days in Denver, I proceeded to Fort Collins, Colo., 75 miles north of Denver and 40 miles south of Cheyenne, Wyo. This town is situated in the agricultural district, and farms in the vicinity sell readily for $100 per acre. Here I received more benefit than at any other place I have visited, gaining about 10 pounds in six weeks. The weather becoming too cool for me to keep outside with comfort, I returned to Denver, where I remained for the next month.

My opinion of Denver as a health resort is very poor, indeed, and I would never advise anyone contemplating a trip in search of health to stay there longer than to change cars. I have many reasons for my conclusions, but will only give two—the most important, according to my judgment. In the first place, the city is absolutely overrun with victims of tuberculosis, and it is next to impossible to secure a boarding house without coming in contact with some poor unfortunate. It is most depressing to a well man to be continuously in the company of the sick, and it is doubly so for a man similarly afflicted, it being perfectly natural for them to frequently refer to their symptoms and condition. By all means I would advise keeping away from invalids and seeking recreation and company more cheerful.

I found Denver a very expensive place to live, board costing at least a third more than in Washington for similar service. In fact, everything is higher in this country than in the East—except wages.

My second objection to the city—and a very important one—is the outlook for employment. It is estimated that there are 5,000 idle men on the streets of Denver every day in the year. I should say nine-tenths of them are men without trades. However, most of those with trades are anxious for employment, and the same faces can be seen day after day parading the streets in search of work.

For cold-bloodedness I think that Denver will "absorb the pastry." Here is an instance of common occurrence: A dealer in one of the numerous faro layouts was wending his way home about 4 a. m. after his eight hours of labor in separating some of the "wise guys" from their money, when on reaching the corner of Larimer and Eighteenth streets he was held up by a couple of women. Of course he interposed some objections and proceeded to hand out a few hot ones, with the result that one of the "ladies" opened fire with a .38 caliber and pied some of the head lines in his front page. The victim made his way to headquarters, some six or eight blocks away, and told his story to Chief Armstrong. The chief asked him why he did not call to some one, and the man replied that he only met one man on the street, a printer, and called to him that he was shot, and the man replied that "he didn't give a d——," and continued on his way home.

I hope you may be able to discern the point in my story without the use of a net. If not, you can spring it as a riddle.

While in Denver I met quite a number of boys whom I have known elsewhere, among them William E. Shields, who is reading proof on the Times; "Billy" Waters, who worked on the Post some years ago, and "Billy" Foley, an operator on the News, who at one time had a machine on the Times in Washington.

Monte Swick, who read proof on the Washington Post for some six or eight years, was employed on the Denver Post in a similar capacity, but is now telegraph editor on the Anaconda (Mont.) Standard. I understand he is much improved in health, which fact his many friends will be pleased to hear.

I also met A. J. E. Hubbard and wife, of THE TRADES UNIONIST, and we came down to the Springs together some five weeks ago.

Upon my arrival here I immediately proceeded to the Printers' Home. It has been my privilege to visit a number of institutions, but never have I seen anything to surpass it in beauty and comfort. We were met by Mr. and Mrs. Deacon, who showed us over the buildings and grounds. It is about as near to being a real home as could possibly be secured. Everything was neat and clean and has the appearance of being well managed.

I have talked with a good many of the boys, and am glad to say they have no complaints to make, outside of the life being somewhat monotonous on account of there being no employment. The Home has a small library, and the reading room is always filled with those fond of good literature, while those who prefer an outdoor life have ample opportunity in the extensive grounds of the Home.

I am told that nearly everything they use in the way of vegetables, meat, and provisions of all kind, is raised on the premises. They have as handsome a bunch of Holstein cattle as I ever saw; also hogs, chickens, turkeys, and in fact everything to be found on a well-conducted farm.

If I am not mistaken there is a prejudice against the Home by many of our members, they being under the impression that being admitted there savors somewhat of charity. I wish I was able to say something that would disabuse their minds of such a foolish idea. There is nothing whatever there that has the smallest hint of charity attached to it, and a man is welcomed there as hospitably as it could be possible to do so. He is made to feel like it is home, with all that that word implies. His clothing is provided, his laundry is done on the premises, he receives medical attention when needed, and he is allowed 50 cents per week for tobacco, car fare, etc. There are no restrictions as to his coming or going, except that he must report in person or in some other manner by 10 p. m.

I have never felt prouder of my membership in the International Union than when I looked about the beautiful home and grounds and realized what a wonderful work we are doing, and at such a small expense to the individual members. I do not believe 1 member in 100 would be able to tell what share of the expense he bears. I confess I do not know and don't care. I want to see it grow, so that it may always be large enough to shelter our members who may seek admission.

Right here I want to make a suggestion. There are a number of tuberculosis patients at the Home, and they are made as comfortable as circumstances will permit, their quarters being everything that could be desired. It is a well-known fact, and has been demonstrated times without number, that an outdoor life is the only cure for that dreaded disease. Therefore I think we should provide tents enough, so that the boys can spend all their time outside in the sunlight and fresh air. There is ample room in the grounds, and it would require only a small outlay to provide a sufficient number of tents and equipment. Anything you can do in that direction would be appreciated by all.

The Washington contingent are getting on nicely. Jimmy Fitzgerald contemplates a trip East in the near future, and no doubt will be in Washington.

Hubbard and wife called on me yesterday on their way to Cripple Creek and Victor. He is looking much better than when I last met him, and his many friends will no doubt give him the glad hand when he returns home in the fall, which he expects to do. Mrs. Hubbard is also looking well, having improved very much since coming here.

Hubbard and I are considering the advisability of putting up a tent for the summer in this city, which is the handsomest city of its size in the country.

I have visited Pike's Peak, the Garden of the Gods, Manitou, Cheyenne Canyon, and numerous other places of interest in this vicinity. I consider it the best town in the State to summer in, believing I can secure lasting benefits and at the same time enjoy some of the most wonderful scenery to be found in the Rockies.

As to my physical condition, I regret to say I have not improved as rapidly as I expected. I find my illness very stubborn and hard to conquer. Of course I have had the winter weather to contend with, which has kept me indoors, but now that spring will soon be here I'm expecting great benefits.

Remember me to all inquiring friends, and say to them if they contemplate a trip here on a similar mission, now is the time to come, even though they may not have all the money they want. They raise two crops of alfalfa out here, and I am assured the next crop will be very nutritious.

Trusting that you continue well and prosperous, I am,

Yours, fraternally,
CARLOS B. TOMLIN.

I have for a few days one of the biggest bargains in the northeast—a three-story brick, on a shady street, tiled bath, tiled vestibule, furnace heat, stone foundation. Others have sold for $4,500. For a few days I can sell you one of these for $3,650—$300 cash and small monthly payments. J. F. McCORMICK,

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

"Have you heard anything of a combination between certain candidates for delegates this year?" asked an anxious supporter of a Job Room man.

"Sure!" said I. "Combines are all the rage."

"I'm afraid this talk about Fitzwilliam, Purvis, and Onyun being in a combine will hurt Fitz, ain't you?" he asked.

"Certainly not," was my reply. "Fitz couldn't mix with two better men, and to be out of all combinations is to be out of the race."

* * * *

"I'm awfully worried about the reported combine between Purvis, O'Donnell, and Stretton," said a Night Biller. "It may lose John votes."

"It'll make him votes," said I. "Didn't you see what fine team work the Fleming-Bynum-Bloomer merger did last year?"

"Were you really in a combination?" he asked.

"Of course! Don't the result show it?" I was almost too disgusted to answer.

* * * *

"Do you think Onyun's being in a combination with Babcock and Stelle will hurt him?" asked a worried supporter of the Peorian, knowing that I was "on."

"Why, no, you chump!" said I, gently reassuring him. "It will help him and them."

"Do you really think these combines amount to anything?" he asked.

"Well, you saw the trouble I had breaking a hole in the Bynum-O'Donnell Fleming ring last year, didn't you?"

* * * *

"If it wasn't for this report of Harry O'Donnell being in a combination with Stretton and Fitzwilliam, I'd have no fears for him," said a hot dog in the Fifth Division.

"It's on that that I base my prediction that he'll lead the ticket," said I. "He loses none of his own strength and gains all that of Stretton and Fitz."

"I hardly thought O'Donnell would go into anything of the sort," said he.

"If you had known all that Tom Bynum and I knew last year you would talk so dauncy," said I.

* * * *

"It's the talk of a combination between Stelle, Fitzwilliam, and Meritt that worries me," said an old National Guardsman supporter of my old apprentice.

"You can turn off your worry," said I, "for it's the strongest combine in the field. Joe will bring in the soldiers, Fitz will bring in the Indians, and Meritt will draw in the respectable element, while the Job Room votes, though belonging to none of these classes, will also be controlled by Joe and Fitz."

"You're a great politician," said he, admiringly.

* * * *

"I feel more confident than ever of Stretton's election," said a Day Proof Room henchman, "since we made the combine with Onyun and Babcock." He realized the folly of trying to keep such deals from me and thought he was telling me something.

"Certainly, Michael," I answered. "And it is an achievement of which I am proud."

"Oh, you did it, did you?" said he, in undisguised admiration. "I recognized the fine Italian hand of a master in it."

"You have been living long enough to know who does the really clever work," said I, pityingly.

* * * *

"Meritt has hurt himself by going into this combination with O'Donnell and Stelle," said a young printer-lawyer, "but I shall work for him all the harder."

"On the contrary, you can now rest on your oars," said I, "for his election is assured. I had hard work arranging it, though."

"Oh, it's your work, is it?" said he, and his features lighted up. "Then I know it's all right."

"You can be sure that any move I make is for the best," said I. "I could not afford to smirch the glory of my past career by failure now."

* * * *

"Bab, Purvis, and Meritt—them's them!" shouted an enthusiastic Poodler, "only we don't want to let the combination get out."

"You are evidently new in this thing," said I, "Bab's election is now made sure, and with such running mates the other fellows might as well quit."

"You believe in combines," he asserted.

"There hasn't been a man elected in Columbia Union for years who wasn't in one," said I.

* * * *

"Do you think Cos Rodier is in any combination?" asked a down-town man, with awe-laden voice.

"Cos is not a chump; therefore he is doubtless in several," I answered.

"Oh, I'm so glad," came the relieved response. "I was afraid his rigid principles would make him stand aloof, and I know the necessity of these things."

"No man has any principles whatever in politics, whether union or political politics, and Rodier is no different from the rest of us. He is in all the combines I could get him into, and I am looking for more," I said.

"You don't know what a load you have taken off my mind," he answered with great simplicity.

* * * *

"Frank Lerch stands alone, with no entangling alliances," said a G. P. O. supporter. "He would rather be defeated than go into a combination."

"It would be a pity if Mr. Lerch had to stand for all that his fool friends say of him," I answered. "Do you want to figure out that he is unfit to represent the union?"

"Do you mean to say that a man who refuses to go into a combination is unfit to represent the union?" he asked, fiercely.

"There has never been a test of such a man," I replied, "and of course it is impossible to say absolutely. But I doubt if you know all that Mr. Lerch and I know, and if you are squeamish on the subject, don't investigate, though I don't mind telling you, as a friend of his, that I have succeeded in placing him in six."

His chagrin was pitiable.

* * * *

Attorney John J. Foster, of Waco, Tex., recently wrote a legal opinion on the water question of that city which is very favorably commented on and warmly indorsed by the citizens. He is steadily making his mark and rapidly rising in his profession, but his interest in Washington affairs is as keen as when he was a reviser in the G. P. O.

I received a souvenir postal card last week from A. J. E. Hubbard, dated Victor, Colo. (Bull Hill), April 30, saying: "Superintendent Deacon and family, myself, and wife send greetings from 10,500 feet above sea level." Mr. Hubbard has fully regained his health and I understand intends to make Colorado his home for several months.

Many associate the word "union" in their minds constantly with "strike." In thirty-three years' union membership I have been in just one strike, and that was really a lockout.

* * * *

Among the candidates for delegate in other cities is J. J. McCarthy, of Atlanta, Ga., who worked for a number of years in the G. P. O. and has many friends here who will welcome him next August if he is elected. A friend of mine of thirty years ago, M. W. Walton, is a candidate in Scranton, Pa., and I shall be glad to hear of his election.

A letter from Dr. James Dick Bridger states that he has finished his term of service on the staff of the Lying-in Hospital, New York, and was immediately appointed on the staff of the Nursery and Child's Hospital for a year. His new work will be in children's diseases entirely, and there are now about 150 patients in the hospital. He states that he is permanently located and doing nicely.

* * * *

I shall leave the reporting of the Bramwood banquet to some one whose presence will enable him to do justice to the subject, as I was unable to attend because of a previous engagement of my $2 and night's wages, but I take great pleasure in stating that during his visit Mr. Bramwood renewed many old acquaintances, made many pleasant new ones, and made a very favorable impression upon all with whom he was brought into association. As a genial gentleman and a capable officer, he deserves to hold his present position as long as it shall please him.

One begins to get an idea as to how many labor organizations there are in this country when he looks over the list of Waudby's indorsements for Commissioner of Labor.

* * * *

Titus F. Ellis was recently in St. Louis, where he was made welcome in a royal manner. Uncle Joe Jackson and Charlie Kniseley promise to be here at the convention with a delegation two carloads strong. At the meeting of St. Louis Union which Ellis attended while there Waudby was indorsed for Commissioner of Labor, an honor which has been accorded him by all the large typographical unions except that of this city, where the question has never been submitted. St. Louis Union now numbers over 1,000 members.

* * * *

My old Scranton friend "Jy" Ross sent me his regards the other day, with the welcome news that he will be here at the convention. "Jy's" messenger is a student at the Linotype School, Mr. Geiss (not knowing how he spells it, I spell it after the Pennsylvania Dutch fashion).

* * * *

I see my two friends Percy B. S. Thayer and William J. Thomas, of the Herald, are candidates for delegates from Boston Union, and without having any prejudice against their competitors I hope both will be elected. John Douglass is candidate for secretary, against Arthur G. Davis.

* * * *

One of the parties in a shooting affray at Yazoo City, Miss., on May 9, accounts of which were published in the papers, and in which two men were killed and two seriously wounded, was Frank R. Birdsall, a printer, who was a delegate to the New York (1885) I. T. U. convention from Nashville, when he visited Washington, and he will be remembered by some. He was a rather slight chap, but blooded, and there is a story of the way he cleaned out the bully of the Nashville Union office many years ago. He is now in jail with a charge of murder against him.

* * * *

The chap who started the story that if elected Mr. Lerch or Mr. Rodier (the tale is so idiotic that I can't remember against whom it is directed) will introduce a resolution "to put machines in the G. P. O." must have had a large opinion of the intelligence of those to whom he told it. Such a yarn wouldn't fool a Digger Injun. What does any ass suppose any one would want to introduce such a resolution for? Go and be bored for the simples!

There are enough Philadelphians in Washington to make the publication of the nominees for the principal Philadelphia Union offices desirable. They are as follows: For president, John M. Driver, A. D. Calvert; vice-president, F. H. Flury, N. A. Hilbron; secretary-treasurer, W. J. Bollman, C. S. Clayton, W. E. Sutton; delegates to I. T. U. (four to be elected), H. D. Wallace, John Meade, Walter Faries, E. S. McIntosh, B. F. Bodine, A. E. Crowell, G. W. Clifton, J. A. Murray, Ernst Kreft, William Toomey. Among the nominees for delegates to the Printing Trades Section of the Central Labor Union is our formerly own and only Shelby Smith, who was also nominated for president, but declined. Two of the four I. T. U. delegates are to be from the book and job offices and two from the newspapers. As Boston has been similarly districted for years, those who threaten to contest or have our districting law repealed or declared unconstitutional in case they are not satisfied with the result of the election may run up against a snag in a convention composed mostly of newspaper men when it is represented that only by the present law is there any guaranty of representation for the newspaper men of this city.

* * * *

Harry W. Templar, one of those recently "let out" of the G. P. O., has gone to work in the State printing office at Harrisburg, and has taken up his residence in that city. He knew that when a man loses a job there is nothing to do but go after another one.

* * * *

D. M. Peffer, of Topeka, Kans., an ex-president of Topeka Union, is visiting his sister and his brother, W. A. ("Jake") Peffer, jr., of this city. There are a number of Kansans who will learn with interest of the presence of Mr. Peffer in the city.

A. F. BLOOMER.

He Had His Card.

The following, taken from the Western Laborer, shows that our own "John L." has not lost any of that masterful ability to win out in tight places that marked his career when a leader in the affairs of Columbia Typographical Union No. 101:

John L. Kennedy had an experience in Omaha that was altogether different. He was stopping at the Iler grand. Monday the guests of the hotel had considerable difficulty in getting their baggage to and from the hotel. Mr. Kennedy did some tall thinking Monday night and early Tuesday morning he got wise. After breakfast he went down to the teamsters' headquarters and, after introducing himself to President Crews, stated that he was a union printer and requested permission to have his trunk taken to the depot. President Crews said: "The printers are our friends, but you will have to show me." Mr. Kennedy "showed" him a card in Washington typographical union with dues paid to next October. Then Mr. Crews sat down and "spread ink" thusly: "To whom it may concern—Permit one trunk to be taken from Iler Grand to depot," signed and sealed it and handed it to Mr. Kennedy. It was good, too. This is perhaps the first time on record that a printer had to get a permit to leave town.

The above can be better explained to the reader by stating that a strike of teamsters was on while Mr. Kennedy was in Omaha, and that the city was tied up on transportation facilities.

Mr. Simpson, Mr. Simpson,
You did a chairman up;
And the Spess Division lunch girl
Daily saves for your a sup.

When you struck the Spess Division,
'Twas for you a lucky day;
Mr. Simpson, Mr. Simpson,
Things are coming you own way.

The Spess elevator men are anxious to form a union.

Theo. Hodes, has been temporarily transferred to the main office.

Miss Mary A. Connolly received her permanent appointment Saturday.

Mr. Chas. E. Sickels at present is operating a Lanston in Philadelphia.

Gus relates a true tale entitled: "Between the Acts; or the Fat Lady."

Speaking of botany, how many know that the buttercup closes at night and opens in the morning?

Mr. W. A. Marschalk has gone to Philadelphia to receive treatment for a severe strain to the sciatic nerve.

This division is the proud possessor of the president of the Woman's Auxiliary Association, Miss Laura B. Gordon.

The little daughter of Mr. J. E. Payne, of the Gazette Division, has been seriously ill at Sibley Hospital with typhoid fever.

Mr. John Purvis, candidate for delegate, was within our fold Monday. John looks healthy as usual and should make a strong candidate.

Mr. W. C. Wood was robed of $65.00 by a chambermaid at his place of residence. The thief was caught, but the money was not recovered.

The all-absurbing query: "When do we move to the main office?" I understand we are to occupy the space from the First to the Fifth Division.

Miss Anna Wilson and Miss Carrie L. Whitehead, are credited with selling a large number of tickets for the benefit of the Woman's Auxiliary lawn fete.

Rogers caught some fish the second time out. At least he had a basket and a sunburnt face across the way Saturday, and Alley 1 adjourned unanimously to grasp the situation.

Jimmy Harper doesn't take any dare "Doc" Hauer throws out. When "Doc" dared him to take half day off and go on a skating excursion Jimmy promptly accepted the challenge, and "Doc" as quickly hedged.

No more night or Sunday work. The steady increase in patents has compelled an addition to the force of 40 compositors, 3 proof readers and 3 copy holders, who began operations Monday in the main building.

Messrs. Wallace, Alburtis, and Hering, proofreaders, have been transferred to the main office as proofreaders. Also Miss Josepha Lange, Mr. Charles F. Fletcher, and Miss Nellie G. Stagge, as copyholders.

Mr. F. E. Buckland has been promoted from the proofroom to the position of clerk at the main office, vice Raymond, promoted to a responsible position in the Bureau of Labor. Mr. Raymond was at one time a member of this force.

Coming down New York Avenue the other morning I read a sign, thus: "White and Yellow Wash Done Quick and Cheap." Would like to be informed what it means. Another sign next door to a shoemaker's emporium looks like a Greek or Hebrew inscription. Just read it backward, and the puzzle is solved.

Treasury Division.

This division was well represented at the circus.

Miss T. R. Harkness, proofreader, is with us again. All were glad to welcome her back.

There was quite a good many absent from the office last week, taking the few remaining days of leave due them.

M. G. Molan represented this division at the banquet given at the Ebbitt House last week in honor of Secretary Bramwood.

Ed. L. Winne took several days' leave last week to go on a fishing trip. He was as brown as a berry upon his return and reports a splendid time.

It is quite likely that H. J. Gaylor will invite us all over to the New Willard next pay day to celebrate the advent to his home of a son, who was born May 7.

Grant E. Price, whose death in California was chronicled in last week's issue of THE TRADES UNIONIST, was a brother of Clint O. Price, proofreader, of this division.

Misses Whitehead and Wilson, representing the Woman's Auxiliary, canvassed this division Monday and sold about forty tickets for their lawn fete, which will be held at Hyattsville, Md., Monday evening.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

Quiet campaign.

Union meeting Sunday.

Next Wednesday is the day.

The down town campaign is so quiet that a rumor can't get a start.

The Post Rod and Gun Club, Don L. Murray, president, and M. L. Statler, secretary-treasurer, has leased a house at Little Hunting Creek for the summer.

Sam Musick, until recently an employee of the proof room, G. P. O., has sailed for the Philippines to accept a position at the Bureau of Printing, at Manila.

Albert P. E. Doyle, until recently employed in the G. P. O., has accepted the position of superintendent of the mechanical department of the New Century Press.

James E. Hoes, of the Specification Division, G. P. O., left Wednesday for a six weeks' trip to the West—three weeks at Los Angeles, Cal., and three weeks at Denver, Colo.

Ben Shannon is renewing old acquaintances in the city, after an absence of about two years. He is now managing the interests of a syndicate controlling several health resorts in Virginia.

Geo. H. Norton, well-known to most of the G. P. O. printers, passed through the city this week en route to Charlottevillé, Va., where he will establish an up-to-date newspaper. Mr. Norton has been conducting a daily paper at Winchester, Va., the News-Item, and will leave that city for his new field of endeavor.

John H. Delaney, superintendent of the Morning Telegraph, and an ex-president of No. 6, was married to Miss Eleanor Leary, daughter of T. Leary, of the Daily News, on April 20, at the Church of the Sacred Heart, Brooklyn, by the Rev. Father Nash. A wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. Delaney and his bride spent a week in Washington viewing its interesting sights—New York Unionist.

Post Pencilings.

Mr. William Galbraith spent several days of last week in Philadelphia.

Frank Hughes, of the Times, is now investing his surplus funds in furniture.

Have you written that letter to one of the advertisers in the rat Los Angeles Times? No! Then, why haven't you?

Judging from the frequent appearance of Mat Maloney in the Post composing room, there must be something doing in union politics.

Mr. Wayne Byers, of the Post chapel, who has been confined to his home in Alexandria for the last three weeks, is now suffering from locomotor ataxia.

A rumor (or maybe its only a prophecy) is going the rounds that the blow-out of the successful downtown candidate for delegate will have a German flavor.

George M. Charles, Lou Pfeiffer, and several others put in the day Monday above Aqueduct Bridge, fishing. The catch: Several sun-burned faces and that tired feeling.

It is rumored that a gentleman from the Times started out several days ago with a bundle of money to wager on his favorite for delegate. His bundle is said to have disappeared very rapidly.

Mr. Fred Decker, who has been in Providence Hospital for some weeks, where he underwent an operation, is doing nicely, and has been transferred to his home. He expects to be at work in a week or ten days.

Mr. George S. McCurdy, who was promoted from the composing room to sporting editorship of the Post, has been with the Senators in the interest of that paper since they started on their present tour. He returned home Saturday.

Parry, the man who made such an anarchistic speech in New Orleans against labor unions, has made a contribution to a labor union to help defray its expenses for a convention, and says he didn't do it to square himself. Wonder what he did it for, then? Funny man, that fellow Parry.

Miss Teresa McDonald, one of the readers on the Post, appeared in the composing room at pay time Monday with a hand full of tickets for the lawn fete of the Ladies' Auxiliary on May 18, and did a land office business for a few minutes, the boys buying all the tickets in sight.

A number of down-town printers and others have organized themselves into a fishing club, and have a six-room cottage down the Potomac. They will be ready to receive visitors in a week or two. The club has no name as yet, so I suggest that it be called the "Umpty Dumps." Bill Knowles, of the Post, was elected chief bottle holder. Ben Thorpe is said to be the only private.

It would seem from a perusal of the correspondence in the last Typographical Journal, that quite a number of unions throughout the country have followed the example set by Columbia Union in refusing to allow the trading of matrices between newspapers. Boston, Helena, Mont., Des Moines, Iowa, and at least one other union have refused to agree to propositions similar to the one turned down by Columbia Union.

First Division.

TOO LATE.

'Twas a bright, sunshiny morning in the merry month of May,
The trees were full of leaflets and the grass as soft as down,
When with the colored brothers Nelson Moyer went away,
For he knew by all the tokens that the circus was in town.

When he struck the asphalt pavement he was going very fast,
For he saw by his chronometer that the time was drawing near,
And he longed to see the lions and the monkeys as they passed,
So he didn't even stop to get his customary beer.

* * * * * * *

Alas! although the sun shines bright upon us all to-day,
The birds are singing gaily and all nature seems in chime,
Great gobs of gloom hang round and refuse to go away,
And there's nary consolation in "The Good Old Summer Time."

For as he struck the street he heard the bands of music play;
He hoped to see the camels and the Shetland ponies, cute.
Alas! the show had passed him somewhat earlier in the day
And he got there just in time to hear the steam piano toot.

Louis Vogt won the bicycle that was raffled off by Peter Rusk.

Owing to social engagements, T. Frank Morgan will be unable to run for teller at the coming election.

The following is a correct list of candidates for teller: Messrs. Drayton, Nesbitt, Ellis, Fuhrman, Purdy, and J. M. Cobb.

The following men were transferred to the Spess last week: C. B. McCann, Thomas L. Wade, Louis P. Naylor, and Harry E. Giles.

What is the matter with the candidates? There have been only one around since the first introduction. Remember, boys, there are 145 votes in this room and every one counts.

The First Division baseball team, composed of the following players, will play a match game of baseball on Saturday evening at 5 o'clock, on the Mahone Lot, with the Third Division: Vogt, p.; Beckwith, c.; Plummer, 1b.; Mayers, 2b.; Bodenhamer, 3b.; Nachman, ss.; Love, r. f.; Wright, l. f.; Mover, c. f. Everybody invited.

Second Division.

In the order named Messrs. Purvis, Onyun, and Abbott have paid this division a second campaign call.

H. Newsom is spending a few days in Philadelphia visiting his brother, who is with the Lanston Monotype Company.

J. E. Bright's friends in this division are pleased to learn that he is improving. Last Sunday evening he had several hemorrhages of the nose.

Miss Lange, who has been temporarily transferred from the Spess to the main office as a copyholder, was shaking hands with old friends in this division Monday.

Many of his friends say T. Frank Hall, of this division, made one of the best speeches of the evening at the reception tendered J. W. Bramwood at the Ebbitt House last week.

Misses Whitehead and Wilson, representing the Woman's Auxiliary, met with a cordial reception in this room and sold a large number of tickets for the lawn party at Hyattsville, Md., next Monday.

What seems a misfortune is sometimes a blessing in disguise. J. F. McCormick is now a busy real estate and insurance agent. He represents the only insurance company not in the trust. Mc. says he has some snaps in dwellings for investors.

Owing to the resignation of the chairman on Monday, a special election was held. It was a very quiet one for this division. W. N. Goldstein received 43 votes and H. Newsom 32. Newsom made no canvas and did not intend to run until just a half hour before the election.

Ben J. Shannon, formerly assistant foreman in the Second, is in town for a few days. He says he has gained 20 pounds in weight and is in fine health since leaving this office. He is now manager of a pair of mountain resort hotels at Harrisonburg and Massenatta Springs, Va.

This division furnished a large number of members for William H. Collins Council, No. 1030, National Union, which was instituted at Scottish Rite Temple, Monday evening, the ceremonies being conducted by Capt. H. T. Brian, ex-president of the Order, and Senator Joseph Dierken.

Edgar Meritt, the deservedly popular candidate for delegate, gave us a slight intimation of how he became popular. Before the election for chairman on Monday he notified the two candidates that he would present to the defeated one a ticket to a fine New England dinner, so he would not "have to eat crow," although he was defeated.

W. H. Hickman, who has suffered for over two years from a pain in his right leg, supposed to be rheumatism, is quite jubilant over the fact that Dr. Chadwick and a consulting physician have diagnosed his case and claim they can give him relief. Mr. Hickman has spent a great deal of time and money with eminent specialists, who were unable to determine the cause of his trouble.

Bindery Notes.

Foreman Byrne has returned after a week's trip out West.

Jacob Fay is now in the gold fish business. If you want a mess call on him.

Fred. Sexton, of the Folding Room, cut his hand and had several stitches put in, and will probably not play ball this season.

James Feeney just received a copy of Mr. W. Coffey's report, the delegate sent over from England to study up the book-binding industry.

Captain White will pay big money if his lost vitality can be restored. We recommend a safe and harmless cure—a first class dinner every day. No charge for prescription.

Jack Walsh, the most prominent golf player of the Swamp, is in first-class form and only happy when on the links. The visiting golfers are assured of a keen competitor, and our Jack will carry off several of the cups before the season ends.

Joseph Meehan, of the Folding Room, is backing Shamrock III. Joe says Lipton will lift the cup this year. Joe knows a thing or too about yachts, for when he sailed for this country he made the trip in or about three months. O, what a beautiful ocean!

I am personally acquainted with Lord Count Courtney, the gentleman who "Handy Andy" wrote up so ably in last week's issue. I understand the Count will give a lecture in the near future and will prove to the people a few things that will surprise them.

Big Six Nominations.

The Adminstration Party, of New York Typographical Union, No. 6, held a largely attended caucus on April 26, and the following ticket was chosen to represent the Adminstration in the coming election: President, P. Carter, and George W. Morris.

Joseph seems "strictly" obedient.

Colonel Pulliam has announced himself as a candidate for teller. Luck to you, Colonel.

Since all the Musick of the office has been sent to the Philippines we will miss its many melodious strains.

While we wish the candidates well,
We can only vote for four—
Rodier, Purvis, and John Onyun;
Well—we will not tell no more.

Some of the candidates have been soliciting a good time on the night of the election. From this we infer that they entertain little hope of having a good time later on.

Rodier's election is a "foregone conclusion" among many of the boys. Quite a few of the candidates would be better satisfied if their chances were half as good as Rodier's seems to be.

The baseball team of the force seems to have taken fresh courage after reading the results of the Washington team on the rapid strides it has taken in securing its long-occupied position—"tailenders."

Several of the boys have become fishermen; at least we have been informed that they have taken the first two degrees, viz., "Fisherman's Luck" and "Stickitiveness." We congratulate them on their success.

Misses Wilson and Whitehead, of the Spess, visited the force Tuesday night, both to the delight and embarrassment of some, in behalf of the lawn fete to be given at the home of John McCormick, Hyattsville, Md., on the evening of May 18. One or two of the force were so much "embarrassed" that they mysteriously disappeared, and only for the assistance of John Greene, jr., would they have been able to overcome their diffidence and respond, and that after the departure of the ladies. If all who purchased tickets attend the lawn fete work will have to be suspended Monday night next. The ladies know that during a campaign is an excellent time for financial results.

Resolutions on Death of W. H. Collins.

BUREAU OF PUBLIC PRINTING,
OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
MANILA, P. I., March 28, 1903.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: At a meeting of the Allied Printing Trades Association of the Philippine Islands, held on the above date, the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, We have heard with sorrow of the death of Mr. William H. Collins, late chief clerk in the Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C., and personally known to many of the members of this association; and

WHEREAS, The Almighty in His All-wise Providence has deemed it best to deprive the family of the said William H. Collins of a devoted husband and father; therefore be it

Resolved, That the heartfelt sympathy of this Association is hereby extended to the sorrow-stricken family, who, in their grief can only look to Him who alone can comfort the widow and the orphan.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the family of the late William H. Collins and to THE TRADES UNIONIST.

William H. Collins Council, No. 1030.

Ex-President H. T. Brian and Senator Joseph Dierken, of the National Union, launched a new council, to join the 28 live and progressive councils that preceeded it in National Union work in this city, on last Monday evening, at Scottish Rite Hall, with nearly 100 members taken from all walks of life. The new council bids fair to make the older ones get a "hump on" to keep up the pace set by it through its sponsors.

Officers for the ensuing year for this new bud of promise are as follows: President, Edward S. Moores; vice president, Frank H. Miles; speaker, C. E. Etchberger; ex-president, O. J. Ricketts; secretary, Frank E. Eckloff; financial secretary, James McDonald; treasurer, E. F. Geyer; chaplain, J. Getman; usher, Fred A. Collins; sergeant-at-arms, W. B. Cameron; doorkeeper, Thomas Holleran; trustees, James H. Heslet, W. T. Talbott, and John R. Moss; delegate to cabinet, Edward R. Moss.

A Merited Promotion.

Every one who knows Raymond Crist will be glad to learn of his appointment as head bookkeeper in the appointment division of the Department of Commerce and Labor. Mr. Crist's advent into Government service was as proof messenger on Specifications in 1885. On the first of June he will have served Uncle Sam continuously for eighteen and one half years. The older Specification employes have a special interest in the boy Raymond, now grown to manhood, who has not outgrown that natural courtesy which was so marked at the beginning of his career. He has been employed as bookkeeper at the main office for several years, and his record there made the way easy for the promotion just received. May success attend his every effort.

Lines on Papa's Baby.

An interesting event occurred at the home of one of the members of the Sixth Divison, G. P. O., chapel last week, which brought out several contributions to the muse, among which was the following:

[Dedicated to all prolific mothers and fathers and in particular to Mr. C., of the Sixth Division.]

Here's to the baby that's ne'er had a spank—
May he always be jolly, good natured, and frank;
May he live long and prosper, be free from all vice,
Own a lens like his pa's, and take pictures as nice.

May his pa keep on living, and do so some more,
And raise a large family (a la Roosevelt), both sexes galore,
And when he's gray-headed, say sixty or so,
May his boys (?) have a "sit." in the new G. P. O.

Labor Notes.

The textile strike at Charlotte, N. C., is said to be the first strike that has ever occured in the North Carolina mills.

By an action of the Cincinnati Metal Trades Association, about 6,000 machinists, foundrymen, and other employes of metal-handling shops in this city and vicinity have been granted a shorter working week, which is the equivalent of an increase in wages equal to the pay for two hours' work. This action on the part of the association was entirely voluntary, as the employers were not requested to do so by the employes.

A meeting of business men of Vermont was held last week in Rutland to form an organization to be known as the Employers Association of Vermont, similar to a business men's organization formed in Ohio. The objects of the organization will be: To protect its members in their rights to manage their respective business as they shall deem proper; the adoption of a system whereby members may ascertain who is and who is not worthy of their employment; the investigation and adjustment by proper officers or committee of the associatlon of any question arising between the members of their employes when such question shall be submitted to the association for adjustment; to endeavor to make it possible for any person to obtain employment without being obliged to join a labor organization; to protect its members against legislative, muncipal, and their political encroachments.

UNIONS TO THE FRONT.

Organized Labor to Be Prominent in Floral Parade at Los Angeles.

[Special Correspondence.]

LOS ANGELES, CAL., May 4, 1903.

For the first time in the history of Southern California, which is filled with union-haters, organized labor will participate in the annual floral parade in Los Angeles, which will be given on May 8, during the visit of President Roosevelt. H. G. Otis, editor of the notorious scab Los Angeles Times, has resorted to every means at his command to prevent this recognition of the unions, but the citizens in charge of the reception to the President refused to be browbeaten by Otis. He has been turned down completely, and as a last resort he is attempting to discredit the unions by publishing each day outrageous lies about the unions' "intentions" to do this and do that while the President is here. But the more Otis howls the more he calls attention to the fact that he has been ignored

It is safe to say that there is not another newspaper in the United States that so persistently misrepresents organized labor. Otis is exceedingly underhanded in his opposition, his favorite method being to give prominence in his paper to every labor dispute, and in every instance to claim that the unions are in the wrong. The Times especially commended the recent speech of Parry, and has denounced John Mitchell as an anarchist. In its eyes Baer is a martyr.

If every reader of THE TRADES UNIONIST would write letters to the following advertisers in the notorious scab Los Angeles Times, asking that they withdraw and withhold further patronage until the Times is unionized, much good would be accomplished:

Cuticura—Potter Drug and Chemical Corporation, Boston, Mass.

Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association—St. Louis, Mo.

Castoria—The Centaur Company, 77 Murray street, New York, N. Y.

Postum—Postum Cereal Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

Peruna—Peruna Medical Company, Columbus, Ohio.

Wilson Whiskey—Wilson Distilling Company, 100 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

Tutt's Liver Pills—Tutt's Manufacturing Company, New York, N. Y.

Scott's Emulsion—Scott & Bowne, 409 Pearl street, New York, N. Y.

Wright's Indian Vegetable Pill Company, New York, N. Y.

It is the duty of every union man and union woman to assist in the fight being waged against the Los Angeles Times.

"Helen Brown's Mules."

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

I have been a surreptitious reader of your excellent paper for several months and have enjoyed its contents very much. I have been especially attracted by the articles from the able pen of "Pard" Bloomer. But I grieve deeply, Mr. Editor, to discover a fly in the ointment, a flaw in the crystal of his genius, a display of lack of information which used to prompt my old friend Bill Perkins to exclaim, "The ignorance of the poorer classes in the South is truly appalling." I had always given Mr. Bloomer credit for great wisdom, and and my grief is so poignant at this lapse that I hasten to set him right. He uses the expression "All Hades and Brown's mules." This is an erroneous quotation. In order to make perfectly clear and lucid the explanation to follow and show you, your readers, and Mr. B—— wherein his error lies, it will be necessary to tell the story of the origin of the erroneously used saying.

Prior to the civil war there lived in Georgia a maiden lady of advanced years named Helen Brown, who was possessed of much of this world's goods, and chief among the assets of this spinster was a large number of very fine mules. Whenever a task was so difficult as to seem impossible, the neighbors were accustomed to remark that "All Helen Brown's mules could not do it."

I trust, Mr. Editor, that you will publish this statement, correct an error, and fill with gratitude the hearts of a conscience-stricken people who thought they were swearing when they misquoted this saying.

MRS. ANDREW KEINER.

From the Western Laborer.

John L. Kennedy, former United States industrial commissioner, was in Omaha several days this week. Mr. Kennedy was twice elected president of Typographical Union, No. 101, was father of the idea and chairman of the committee that erected Typographical Temple, the magnificent home of the Washington Union, and was a delegate to the Boston and Chicago conventions. Mr. Kennedy is one of the best known members of the Typographical Union in the United States and few men in that organization are his equal. As a newspaper correspondent he was as clever and as successful as when he was building Typographical Temple and making that splendid printers organization in Washington. We enjoyed his visit immensely and feel much better for having spent so many hours in such good company.

Harness-makers throughout the country are demanding a working day of nine hours and the same weekly wage scale that is now paid for a ten-hour work day. One and a half rate scale to be paid for overtime. The demand is to take effect from Monday, May 4.

O'DONNELL, MERITT, PURVIS, LERCH

Chosen by Columbia Union, No. 101, to Represent Her Interests in the Next Convention.

The Contest Close and Exciting Between Purvis and Stelle for Third Place—Lerch Wins Easy Down Town—O'Donnell's Vote a Surprise to a Great Many—Babcock and Fitzwilliam Make a Good Showing—Vaughan Elected Vice-President—Johnson, Garrett, Berg, Stoops, and Bates Re-elected Without Opposition—C. C. Thompson Chosen Trustee.

The election of officers in Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, closed one of the quietest campaigns in the history of that organization. The interest manifested in the election of delegates to the I. T. U. was only of a passive nature, and up to within two days of the election the constituents of the various candidates betrayed but little interest in the outcome. As usual, the last day marked a great change in the fortunes of some of the candidates, as the real workers took hold of the candidate of their choice and made his chance to reach the goal of his ambition look brighter to him. It was a clean campaign and in striking contrast with some of the contests witnessed by the members of the Union in years past.

NOTES.

It's all off for another year.

Harry O'Donnell ran like a scared deer.

The Spess came up handsomely for Meritt.

The membership evidently are not partial to a vegetable diet.

Dan Vaughan and W. R. Abbott had a nice quiet race all to themselves.

This campaign will go down as the quietest in the history of the Union.

Lerch got the down-town vote in the newspaper chapels, without exception.

This office is under obligations to Alternate-elect J. Ligon King for courtesies extended.

The old war horses in the cause of unionism can keep on working. Their reward will come in the hereafter.

Frank Lerch was presented with a mascot during the day, the Stork having called with a baby girl at his house.

The election judges and tellers in most of the chapels having failed to report the total vote polled, the supervisors were unable to give it in the returns. The total vote is estimated at about 1,450.

The B. U. Club is both a matter of interest and comment by reason of its surprising growth, now numbering 550 members. It is fitted throughout with everything that modern ideas can suggest to make it a home of comfort. Situated at 905 E street northwest, the manager, J. J. Crowley, and the secretary, Jere F. McCarthy, are known for their business acumen, while the directors are men of repute. Everything supplied by the club is the best and at lowest prices consistent with quality. Membership is $1 yearly. Secretary Jere F. McCarthy will gladly supply applicants for membership with further particulars.

Why not insure your furniture? It will only cost $3 for five hundred dollars' worth for three years. I represent the only company that is not in the combination—The Northwestern.

First Division.

"Love laughs at locksmiths" said Slug 95 as he climbed in the window.

E. M. Root has gone off on leave for his health. He will spend his vacation in the Shenandoah Valley.

The burning of the steamer Columbia, of the Alexandria line, will interfere with the vacation plans of a number of employees of this division.

In the formation of a cavalry troop in this city it will not do for the promoters to overlook some of the talent of the First Division for riding instructors.

Harry Nesbitt, before the vote was counted for teller, said he would get as many votes as his slug. He got the exact number, 59. And by the way Nesbitt's election was a victory for the bowlers.

The vote for teller at the recent election was one of the closest that ever took place in this division. There were five candidates, the election resulting as follows: Drayton, 63; Nesbitt, 59; Cobb, 50; Ellis, 45; Fuhrman, 38.

Every employee of this room was presented with a beautiful souvenir in the shape of a lead pencil, the gift of our copy editor, Mr. Charles Leeds. As he was not electioneering for any one his object was a noble one, and for which we all give thanks.

The First Division Base Ball Club beat the Third Division last Tuesday by a score of 26 to 6. The battery work of Vogt and Quantrille of First Division was the feature of the game, holding the opposing team down to 7 hits and striking out 10 men. The next game will be on Saturday between the First and the Fifth. Everybody invited.

Second Division.

"Pard" Julian was sick a day or so last week.

Will E. Soult is in charge of the proof press for a few days.

Shelby Smith is reading proof at Lippincott's, Philadelphia.

Colonel Drake has been holding copy in the proof room for a week.

Frank R. McFadyen was on the rifle range Monday with the National Guard.

Mr. M. V. B. Stevens, who casts up the tables, has returned from a leave of absence.

J. K. Seagraves, late of this office, is operating a Lanston keyboard at Allen, Lane & Scott's in Philadelphia.

Frank O. Sanders received his absolute appointment Monday and "did the right thing" to his alley mates.

H. Balmer, of the Job Room, won the $50 in gold which was raffled off last night by the Century Lodge, K. P.

Tom Fitzgerald, of the proof press, has been off for some weeks. He is troubled with rheumatism, but is reported as improving.

The election for tellers resulted: W. R. Branham, 43; E. J. Hall, 42; Elmer Dement, 38; F. E. Warren, 19. Ben Wolfe and J. W. Childress took up the votes.

Mr. J. W. Belcher was a proud member of the "rumor committee" until Bunker commenced to hand out the rumors. Belcher reluctantly resigned from the committee.

The lawn fete at Hyattsville was enthusiastically attended by a number from this division. The ladies of the Auxiliary deserve the greatest praise for such a pronounced success.

This correspondent wishes to express his appreciation of courtesies shown him while in Philadelphia last week by "Larry" Meyer, who is acting as secretary while the regular incumbent is incapacitated by sickness.

Last season the Baltimore printers expressed a willingness to play the Washington printers. Some of the Philadelphia chapels are playing each other. Later on a match game could undoubtedly be arranged with one or both of these cities.

Mr. F. N. Whitehead, of the Job Room, alighted from the Hyattsville car and called to a crowd of printers, "Come on, boys, I have got a guide to take us to the lawn fete." When they got out to Baltimore Hill, about two miles in the country, Whitey's guide was very much discredited. A native set them right finally.

The Second Division and Job Room on Monday played the first game of the series of the Government Printing Office League. The First, Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth divisions, and the Job Room compose the league. The Second lined up as follows: Reed, p.; Phillips, c.; Young, 1b.; Sheehan, 2b.; McAloon, 3b.; Bright, ss.; Wolfe, lf.; Goodkey, cf.; Newsom, rf. L. H. Neuer, umpire. After the first inning the Job Room had everything their way. A small boy, who was witnessing the game, said: "That Second Division is certainly an affected crowd." And they seemed to be—on the diamond, at least.

NOTES.

Sheehan was on to his job.

Newsom was afraid of flys.

Bright needed a net on short.

Young took good care of first.

Phillips had springs in his gloves.

Goodkey carried too much weight.

Reed would not stand much coaching.

Wolfe swooped down on the balls all spraddled out.

McAloon couldn't jump high enough, but got all in reach.

The captain of the Second's team says he has received resignation No. 1 from Goodkey.

It was apparent to the naked eye that Substitutes Wolfe and Newsom were not professionals.

The minutes of the last stated meeting were read and approved.

Traveling cards deposited since last meeting were read and received.

The Nominations Committee reported favorably on apprentice membership of Wm. S. McDaniel and Leslie Young. They also reported favorably on transfer of W. H. Jackson from apprentice to full membership. On application for membership of C. E. Greenwood the committee asked for further time.

The report of the committee was received and the candidates duly elected.

A communication was read from the Woman's Auxiliary extending an invitation to all members to attend the lawn fete on Monday evening, May 18, under the auspices of the Auxiliary, at Hyattsville, Md.

The secretary reported that he had on hand a number of tickets sent by two organizations and desired to know what disposition the Union desired to make of them. As the Union has had quite a drain on its treasury of late, it was directed that the chairmen of the different chapels endeavor to dispose of the tickets.

The Grievance Committee reported that a Central Labor Union contract had been signed by the proprietors of the Yale Laundry through the intervention of the committee. They asked for further time on the Academy of Music case. The report was received and adopted.

Mr. Bynum, from the Printing Committee, stated that a final report on the Yearbook would be made at the June meeting.

Mr. Hall, from the Allied Printing Trades Council, reported that the Council had printed and ready for distribution certain literature advertising the label.

Mr. Babcock, from the delegates to the Central Labor Union, reported that through the efforts of our Grievance Committee the grievance with the Yale Laundry had been adjusted.

Mr. Eggleston moved that the name of R. W. Kerr be placed on the honorary roll of the Union, which was agreed to.

Mr. Goodkey introduced the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Union set aside one Sunday in the year to be devoted wholly to eulogies and resolutions upon the death of deceased members of the Union.

Mr. Gompers moved that a committee of five be appointed to make suitable arrangements to carry out the above resolution. Agreed to.

Mr. Goodkey offered an amendment to Article XIII, By-Laws, for the purpose of enforcing discipline in the chapels in this jurisdiction, which was laid over to be printed on the call.

Mr. Kidd moved that the secretary be directed to request the president of the International Typographical Union to appoint an organizer, who shall be employed in eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, which was agreed to.

Adjourned.

THE Mixer and Server, the official journal of the Bartenders' League, has the following in its May number:

Wilson Whisky is one of the persistent advertisers in the scab Los Angeles Times. The International Typographical Union is engaged in trying to teach General OTIS that it don't pay to oppose their organization. The printers are pretty good fellows, and have asked their friends to write the advertisers to refrain from patronizing the scab Times. Let us go the writing game a few better; see that Wilson Whisky is left out of sight until they realize that the printers' scrap is ours, too.

Now, let us reciprocate this sentiment and see that the "man behind the bar" has on a blue button when he serves a life-saver or a regular tonic, and thus show our appreciation of the efforts of the I. B. L.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

It is with the keenest satisfaction that I congratulate the Union on the results of the election and its escape from the perils which menaced it by the candidacy of those so happily defeated. Once more the Right has prevailed and the machinations of evil-minded self-seekers are foiled. For many nights I have not slept from the setting of the sun to the rising thereof because of my anxiety as to the outcome of this election and other duties. Of the many members of our Union few have realized that during the weeks of the campaign the fate of Columbia Union has hung trembling in the balance, and at times it has seemed that as little as a hair would sway it either way for happiest results or most direful consequences. However, a small but sturdy band of patriots have stood together and fought for the safety and even the life of our beloved Union, and we now have the proud satisfaction of knowing, hard as has been the struggle, and unequal in point of numbers, that Columbia Union is saved and her reputation unstained. While this is true as to the G. P. O. delegates, and essentially so as to the down-town delegate, it is especially true as to the vice-presidency. We have elected a man to fill that high position, second in importance only to the presidency, in whom we may repose the most implicit trust, both in his honesty and integrity and as possessing a breadth of mind, keenness of perception, and firmness of purpose that will enable him to perform his duties with the signal success with which he has conducted his campaign, which has been a revelation as to his capabilities. I congratulate each and every member on the fortunate outcome of one of the most momentous contests of Columbia Union.

A gentleman from Australia recently complained that that country's commercial development was retarded by the restrictive measures of the trades unions, which are in political control, such restriction consisting of the prevention of the importation of cheap labor to compete with themselves. I am and have always been a protectionist, and as I believe in preventing the importation of cheap goods to compete with our own manufactures, I as thoroughly believe that the importation of cheap labor to compete with the domestic article should be prevented. I do not see how any honest man can think otherwise. And if our Australian brothers have so got the government "on the hip" as to be able to enforce such a policy, more power to them! I hope to see the day when workingmen will similarly control this country.

Johnny Bramwood mentioned in a recent letter that "Shanty" House, a friend of mine of years ago, and known throughout the length and breadth of the land, was in Los Angeles recently. But there is not much use in locating "Shanty," for the chances are against his being there next week.

* * * *

To the defeated candidates of the recent election I desire to extend my sincere sympathy, for I was a defeated candidate once myself, and I am compelled to express the opinion that the Union made a mistake in not selecting them instead of those who, by resorting to all the chicanery and devices of low politicians, succeeded in getting enough votes. I am sure that they will bear in mind the fact that I worked early and late, with pen and voice, for them, but all in vain.

With over $500 in its treasury, the Ex-Delegates' Association is getting into financial shape, and at its next meeting there should be the fullest attendance, for the plan of the entertainment to be given to the convention and visitors will probably be considered. We are all equally interested and all should be present. I believe there are a few who are not easy of access to the secretary and treasurer who have not paid all their dues. We will have over $800 when all "pony up," and I predict that Ex-Delegates' Day will be the feature of the convention.

I'm afraid my friend "Posey," of Posey County, has been deceived by the weak device of a pious enemy in his rather apochryphal story of "All Helen Brown's Mules." If it is true, it robs the venerable comparative phrase of the vigor and zest which have made it useful and expressive.

The success of Lawyers Ralston, Sherrill, Scaggs, Hendler, Shipp, and Foster, and Drs. Kingsman, Chadwick, Miner, Masterson, Taylor, and Bridger (of course there are others) show what printer professionals can do. Of course no one has a right to reflect on those who do not see their way clear to doing equally well at present.

Everything and everybody is being organized into unions—mergers of all sorts of interests for all sorts of purposes. The anti-union union is one devised to prevent the creators of all wealth from enjoying any more of their product than enough to keep them strong enough to create more.

I don't believe there is another as good "breakfast food" in the world as the old-fashioned "hulled corn" of our boyhood days, and that wasn't advertised in the rat Los Angeles Times either. "Postum" reminds me very much of coffee substitutes used by poor people—I was one of them—during the civil war, which was either roasted corn or rye, which I helped prepare sometimes by sorting out the accretions it had received in the bin, and which would probably have added neither to taste or nutritiveness. What an age of humbug we live in! (I know this latter is true, for I've always heard it.)

There has been talk at different times of this or that insurance order building a temple for itself in this city, but the undertaking seems too great. Why can they not join forces and jointly erect a building? I know of five such orders that combined number over 10,000 members, and they could easily build a fraternity temple.

The successful candidates were all in to see us during the past week, as, indeed, were the defeated ones, who, however, received little encouragement.

I'm glad to locate Ben Shannon at last as manager of a set of springs and watering-places down in Virginia, for I've sent him off to South Dakota for his health in two or three articles lately. Ben has evidently become enamored of the water business since he got on the wagon.

Trying to carry elections by big bluffs at betting was properly rebuked at the contest just concluded. Our members vote for those whom they deem the proper ones to elect, and not for a man because some one offers to bet that he will be elected.

Waudby's list of indorsing labor organizations has grown to such a length that I can contemplate it only in sections. If the working people of this country have any influence in controlling a position that was supposed to be created in their interests, he will land the Commissionership of Labor.

I find it easy to forgive an injury done to another, especially if done by myself.

If my party made mistakes, no one would detect and condemn them sooner than I; but my party never makes mistakes.

If I can not do as well as another, I can at least sneer at what he has done.

It bores me terribly to hear others talk when I know so much more about the subject than they do.

It is a source of disgusted wonder to me to see ——— chosen for preferment while I am unpromoted.

I delight in "calling down" the fellow who tells a rotten old chestnut, but I despise the brutality of those who do as much for me.

I like to make as good a showing as I can for myself, but others who do similarly are "working for a record."

I abominate a meddler, but when I do it, it is not meddling.

I think I would despise myself for these characteristics did I not know you have the same traits, only in more pronounced degree.

The Elks' folder giving information as to the annual session of the Grand Lodge at Baltimore on July 21-23 makes the curious and smilable mistake in its Washington section of labeling a cut of the new Post-Office Department building "Government Printing Office." I met M. D. Helm, who was the first foreman of the Congressional Record, thirty years ago et seq., on the street the other day, and though he is here frequently his business is in New York. For a nnmber of years he has been selling printing and binding supplies—anything, from a hair space to a perfecting press in printing and on equally widespread lines in all related trades—and as such he has accumulated an acquaintance among employing printers that is scarcely equaled. He does business with and for the best supply houses only and therefore always handles the best.

Charlie Leeds, of the First Division, was a candidate for delegate in 1891, and during the campaign he gave away 1,500 lead pencils, of course being triumphantly elected. About three years ago he had another ax to grind, and again came around with pencils, getting what he wanted, as a matter of course. Last Tuesday he made another donation, confining his benevolence to his own division. Half an hour after the distribution he went around with tickets for the G. P. O. Council (N. U.) annual excursion, and naturally every man who had taken a pencil bought a ticket. Leeds is a Carlislo-Cumberlandian name, signifying "fox."

Labor Day Celebration.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

As your paper is, or should be, read by men in every trade that is here organized, it occurs to me to ask space for a few suggestions regarding the proper way in which Organized Labor should celebrate the day that in honor to the toiling millions has been designated a national holiday, the first Monday in September being set apart by Congressional enactment. In many cities the occasion is marked by the marshalling of organized trades by tens of thousands, while here picnics and excursions seem the rule.

It is my opinion that the day should be set apart to showing the community the strength of Organized Labor, to give an object lesson of its might, its importance, its power to serve its friends or hurt its foes. There is nothing so impressive as an army of men under the banners of a good cause. I remember an occasion, in this city, when a popular demonstration was determined on in order to aid the mercantile clerks who were struggling for a shorter day. First in the evening a torchlight procession paraded the principal streets of Washington, and later mass meetings were held in three different halls, there being no single hall large enough to accommodate the thousands who had come out in their might and given demonstration of their strength of numbers. Well, sir, we paraded along Seventh street, among other prominent thoroughfares, and passed a number of establishments that usually kept open until a late hour at night. Not one of them was open when we passed. It struck many as significant, and I have often heard leaders in the cause refer to it as a token that if the strength of Organized Labor were but known much more deference to its desires would be accorded.

There is no foe of organized workingmen nearly so hurtful to their cause, as is the indolence, the indifference, the fatal short-mightedness of many of their members. To gain what belongs to Labor, to retain what hard work and intelligent effort has secured, requires eternal vigilance. The spirit of Unionism must never flag. And nothing will so incite our zeal as a public demonstration say once a year. Nothing will so foster mutual interest as to have all the trades combine in such an effort. It brings us nearer, it takes each individual of more value to the whole. It will make us friends among those who prefer to stand well with an army where they would not bother to please individuals. There is yet time to prepare for a turnout Labor Day that will be a credit to our cause, a revelation to those who may not have followed the growth of the Labor movement in the District of Columbia.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Ex-Delegates.

There will be a meeting of the Ex-Delegates' Association of Columbia Union, No. 101, at Typographical Temple, Sunday, May 24, 1903, at 2 o'clock p. m. All ex-delegates are cordially invited to be present.

WM. R. RAMSEY, President.
J. T. HERBERT, Secretary.

Down Town.

C. I. ("Spike") Leonard writes from Chicago that the Washington printer contingent are getting all the work they want.

Lon Shimp writes from Chicago that he leaves that city on the 19th to install a printing office in the Yellowstone Park, for the use of the Park Association. At the close of the season he will go to Seattle to locate.

The May number of the Mixer and Server, the official journal of the International Bartenders' League, has a half tone of Jere F. McCarthy, secretary of Local No. 75, of this city. Mr. McCarthy is an ardent worker for the blue button of the I. B. L. and is a leader in his organization. He has returned from the convention of the International body, held at Philadelphia recently, and ably represented No. 75 on the floor of the convention. Mr. McCarthy was elected a member of the Executive Board.

Jere L. Sullivan, secretary-treasurer of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League of America, was in the city Monday, en route to Cincinnati, after attending the convention of that organization at Philadelphia last week. Mr. Sullivan is credited with having organized the body he represents, which is one of the strongest organizations in the country, and is still an indefatigable worker in its behalf, in addition to his duties as secretary-treasurer, being the editor of its official organ. Mr. Sullivan was accompanied by W. F. Jones, the first vice-president of the same organization, who is on his way to St. Louis.

Post Pencilings.

This advice I give to candidates who lost:
If you think the voters, in not supporting you,
Did you wrong, then, whatever the cost,
Bother Mr. Lynch—appeal to the I. T. U.

A suggestion: Now that the election is over let us organize a couple of ball clubs and mrke the wounds deeper.

Query: If our John L. Kennedy could get a trunk hauled to the depot in Omaha on a paid-up working card, how far would a paid-up traveling card carry him on a freight train?

Mr. William Galbraith is now a bloated regular on the Post, having "landed" on an agate machine, and Mr. Fred Decker will be found in future tickling the ivories on No. 3.

In the fire in Georgetown which burned to death the son and daughter of a policeman, Mr. Fred Ferber, one of the apprentices on the Post, ruined an overcoat in his endeavor to put out the flames.

Almost all the newspaper printers seem to have a vacation and outing planned for about August. If they all make good the poor publishers will be compelled to do their own "printin'" for awhile or suspend publication.

The copy cutter on the Post was so busy one night last week that he run out as copy a postal card addressed to a member of the chapel reminding him to attend a meeting, and the said reminder appeared on the small ad. page next morning.

I see that some labor leaders in Omaha have procured an injunction against some business men. Wonder if it has as much weight as it would if the business men were behind it? Also wonder why it is that we don't see long editorials in the daily papers on the subject.

I have always wondered if it were better to pull off raffles to raise money for entertaining purposes, charities, etc., as the stereotypers are now doing to raise money to entertain their delegates during the coming convention, or raise it by assessment. I am still wondering.

The Post Chapel now averages about sixty members, an increase of about ten in a little over a year, the result of the policy of shorter hours and printing Washington newspapers in Washington. And it is rumored down this way that the Times added another machine to its plant a week or so ago.

All last week our visitors were many,
For we had candidates galore;
They came with smile and outstretched hand
And—some still smile; some are awfully sore.

W. A. Marschalk, who went to Philadelphia for medical treatment, is the lucky winner of the watch raffled for the benefit of Frank Rogers, who has been ill in bed.

Bayard Johnson, the young man who has so long had charge of the elevator, has taken a position as stenographer. He deserves great credit for his ambition and industry.

Assistant Foreman Hodes has charge of the extra force on Specifications at the main office. By the way, it was Mr. Hodes who promulgated the measuring table on our slides.

Mr. George E. Pittman is a novelist, newspaper man, and at one time was proprietor of a large tobacco warehouse at Richmond. Mr. Pittman delights in unloading funny yarns on a certain disciple of Izaak Walton.

A party of tourists from the South were passing the National Museum not long ago. The guide announced the fact and suggested a visit. "Oh, no," said one of the party, an old lady; "I belong to the Methodist Church and could not think of going there!"

Montgomery was ruminating lately over the days when he and "Pard" Bloomer occupied the same bed at the same hotel and washed out of the same bowl. Monty avers that "Pard" always slept with his face to the wall, thus leaving his bedfellow a chance to keep watch over the quinine elixir on the shelf.

I attended a seance the other evening at Pierre Keeler's beautiful residence, on H street. Mr. Keeler is an old-time compositor and editor, but, through his peculiar gifts, became a professional medium or psychic. One hundred names of departed mortals were written by a visible hand, all except one being recognized; faces plainly visible appeared, and George Christie, an old-time minstrel artist, gave solid and practical advice. Good music is provided, and for a small admission fee an evening's entertainment is furnished, which will well repay a visit. His nights are Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

DECLARED UNFAIR

BY THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

The "Yale Steam Laundry" prefers "scabs" to do their steam fitting. Where do you and your friends have your washing done? Help the Union Steam Fitters by refusing your patronage to the Yale Laundry.

R. A. LANIS ASS'N OF STEAM FITTERS

March 10, 1903. L. B. No. 10, N A.

Fifth Division.

Williams had a little "Bab,"
His skin was black as tar;
To everything that Williams said,
This Bab he said "Ba-a."

Ed. Nash is suffering with pneumonia at the Sibley Hospital.

Our chairman was on the firing line (National Guards) last Monday.

Judge Underwood carries as a souvenir a pistol ball that strayed into his room through the window.

Gus B. Diers was dispenser of rings during the absence of the chairman, doing the right thing by the boys and winning general approval.

A ladrone surreptitiously relieved the pocket of Don Huse of 12 pesos last Tuesday a week ago, and up to date the said ladrone has not given evidence of remorse.

Carl's "Fairy King" takes him home after his day's work with such accelerated speed that he is unable to stop by the wayside. 'Reddy," however, thinks this a serious defect.

Last week's issue of THE TRADES UNIONIST was chock full of news and as solid as a brick. If you are not already a subscriber, send in your name. The price is only 10 cents every card day, or 50 cents for six months.

A lively interest was shown in a cartoon placed on our bulletin board by Charles S. Gunn, as the product of his pen, the interest extending even to other divisions. The subject presented was an incident in the Fifth Division base ball game. Mr. Gunn displays remarkable talent, and we believe he could turn it to advantage.

There was an exciting election for tellers in this room on Tuesday. More enthusiasm was shown than at the annual election the following day. Four names were presented, two to be elected. The result was as follows: W. M. Hamilton, 48; Joe Fritz, 45; Wm. A. Uber, 42, and Charles H. Roeder, 16.

Australia, which posed in magazine articles of a few years ago as the union man's paradise, seems to be taking a step backward. A bill was introduced in its legislative assembly which provides that an employee leaving his work without giving four night's notice is to be assumed to have joined the strike (of the railroad now on there) and will incur the penalty of $500 fine or a year's imprisonment. The bill further empowers the police to destroy documents encouraging the strike, makes printers thereof offenders against the law, and declares meetings to be unlawful if four strikers are present.

May I print a kiss on your lips?
And she nodded her sweet permission;
So we went to press,
And I rather guess we printed a full edition.

That Figg tree fails to ripen for some reason or other.

The rumor committee was at sea in regard to George Bilyeau's absence last week.

Bill Haslett, the long-distance boarding-house buster, is now trying his hand on a little two-by-four lunch room on G street.

Herr Julius Von Griebel is the acknowledged leader of fashion up in the roof garden. Notice his make-up on Saturdays.

Barrister Pfirman has a complete list of the free lunches of the District of Columbia. He will furnish his friends with a free copy.

Some of the boys contemplate a trip to Baltimore Decoration Day to play a game of baseball with the Baltimore binders. Gus Bauer and Billy Kelly are to be the chaperones.

Georgie Johnson, the beardless boy, with pink hair, has returned to work after an absence of nearly three weeks. We are extremely glad the circus men did not capture him, as was at first reported.

Jack Atkins went out to Wildwood a short time ago and on his way to cash a winning ticket was invited by a friend to "smile." He went, and then hastened to catch a car for home, utterly forgetting his winning ticket. He is very forgetful, anyway, as will be testified to by the barber who shaves him.

The committee on fishing reports the following: Steve Kelley was instructed to put his bait worms in corn meal, with a few drops of olive oil, over night and they would be nice and fat in the morning. Steve did not have any olive oil, so he used coal oil. When he reached the shore he pulled out his worms and his friends asked him if he was using lamp wicks for bait, as the worms had dried up good and hard.

Annual excursion of the Relief Association of the Women's Bindery Union to Chesapeake Beach, Wednesday, June 10. This organization is a particularly deserving one, as it aims to relieve the distress of its members in time of sickness and infirmity. The entertainments and excursions given in the past are a fair index of what may be expected this year. Every one who can do so should join with these ladies in making the excursion a success and at the same time have the benefit of a pleasant outing.

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES.

Indorses Action of Lanis Association in Regard to Yale Laundry.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of the Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at the usual hour by Chairman Meitzler.

Roll call disclosed the presence of 27 delegates, representing 17 unions.

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, No. 190, containing resolution adopted by that body on May 13. Filed.

From different unions relative to hall at 719 Sixth street northwest. Referred to Hall Committee.

From Samuel Gompers, president of the American of Labor, relative to the Hotel Waldorf. Referred to Business Agent.

A form of contract adopted by Paperhangers' Union, No. 420, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers of America, was read and placed on file.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Entertainment Committee reported that everything points to a successful evening of pleasure. Delegates Ross, of Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers, No. 102, and Walker, of Marble Workers' Helpers, was added to the committee.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Sheet Metal Workers reported that Joseph Mathey and J. E. Albinson are using nonunion men.

Engineers called attention to the use of a nonunion engineer at Georgetown Hospital.

The attention of the Engineers was called to new pumping station, foot of New Jersey avenue, where nonunion engineers were at work.

Steam Fitters stated that the Yale Laundry had not effected a settlement with their union, and asked that the patronage of organized labor be not given to Yale Laundry until notified to that effect by the Steam Fitters. On motion, the request was granted.

Washington Lodge of Machinists, No. 193, stated that National Roller Bearing Company, E. H. Catlin & Co., and Thomas Somerville & Sons were still unfair to their union.

Executive Committee reported having indorsed the request of Steam Fitters and Hod Carriers for an increase of wages, to go into effect July 1; that Monday, May 25, 1903, the hour of 9 o'clock at the meeting of the Central Labor Union had been set apart to take action on Plumbers, Painters, and Paperhangers' unions who were affiliated with that body, but not with this section. The secretary was instructed to write to all those unions on the subject.

Business Agent made report of work for the week, after which the Council adjourned.

[From the Chronicle, Cincinnati, Ohio.]

In Cincinnati Typographical Union, No. 3, Cincinnati trade unionism possesses something with which to challenge comparison with any city in America. Chicago cannot duplicate it, nor can New York say ditto. Even pattern Boston and up-to-date Frisco have nothing like it. Cincinnati has within her gates the only linotype school in the world free to her union printers. It has been in operation for eight months, twenty experts have been graduated as competent to hold their own in any company, and one hundred more are knocking at the door for a chance to be taught. It is costly, but No. 3 pays the bills and believes the money is profitably invested, in accumulating skill that shall not only keep Cincinnati printerdom abreast of the times but develop the home trade to an ever-increasing extent and renown.

Schenectady, N. Y., has 8,856 trade unionists, an increase over 6,000 in two years.

OTIS HIT HARD.

Organized Labor Awarded First Prize in Floral Parade at Los Angeles.

[Special Correspondence.]

LOS ANGELES, CAL., May 10, 1903.

Organized labor of Los Angeles scored heavily during the recent visit of President Roosevelt. As mentioned in a former communication to THE TRADES UNIONIST, H. G. Otis, owner of the notorious scab Los Angeles Times, exerted every effort to prevent the Council of Labor from being represented in the reception to the President. But the citizen's committee refused to take orders from Otis, and issued an invitation to the Council of Labor to be officially represented upon the reviewing stand occupied by the President. The officers of the Council were seated near the guest of honor. In addition to this the Council entered a float in the floral parade, and it was awarded first prize. To make Otis' misery complete, T. D. Fennessy, president of Los Angeles Typographical Union, had command of President Roosevelt's bodyguard, Fennessy having been an officer in the "Rough Riders," who distinguished itself at the battle of San Juan Hill. Is it any wonder that the Times is furious in its denunciation of everybody and everything?

Every union man and woman can help in the fight being made against the scab Los Angeles Times by writing one letter to each of the following advertisers, asking that the advertisement be withdrawn:

American Brewing Company, St. Louis, Mo.

Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, St. Louis, Mo.

Castoria—The Centaur Company, 77 Murray street, New York, N. Y.

Cuticura—Potter Drug and Chemical Corporation, Boston, Mass.

Tutt's Liver Pills—Tutts Manufacturing Company, New York, N. Y.

Scott's Emulsion—Scott and Bowne, 409 Pearl street, New York, N. Y.

Wright's Indian Vegetable Pill Company, New York, N. Y.

If you want to help your fellow-unionists of the Pacific coast, write one letter to each of the above advertisers.

ON THE STREET.

Nothing can so quickly create interest in the ranks of wage-earners as to witness the business success of a former co-laborer, and when one of his erstwhile associates rises above the ordinary level he loses no opportunity to assist him in his onward march. With this end in view, the writer feels it his duty to call attention to the career of H. I. Meader, a man, still young, who after years of work as a boiler-maker, started in the grocery business on his savings of less than $200, and to-day is the proprietor of a magnificent establishment, built entirely by union labor, the fixtures of which alone cost $4,000. Stocked with the daintiest of table luxuries in numberless variety, clerked by union men, ruled by a firm but merciful hand, the establishment stands as a monument to his industry, integrity, and perseverance.

At the recent session of the grand jury, at which Dave Wolf, the popular Seventh street shoe merchant (but, then, who among us don't know Dave?) sat with eleven other tried and true men, it appears that among the balance were found a Fox, a Shepherd, a Rabbitt, a Lamb, and a Beaver. Unless Dave has changed considerable from the good old days when he kept the inhabitants of the Swamp on the jump, the Wolf must have made it pleasant for the Shepherd at least.

THE CENTRAL LABOR UNION

Grievance Committee to Again Take Up Yale Laundry Matter.

SOME MORE UNION DRUG STORES

Amalgamated Painters and No. 368—The Grogan Matter to Be Taken Up by the Grievance Committee—Lanis Association of Steam Fitters and Yale Laundry

The regular meeting of the Central Labor Union was called to order at 8 20 p. m. by Vice-President Sherman.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

From Washington Lodge of Machinists, No. 193, I. A. M., certifying that John H. Burkholder and L. A. Sheetz were chosen to represent that organization in this body. Credentials accepted.

From Electrical Workers, No. 26, certifying C. E. Young, vice W. T. Malloy. Accepted.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From the Organization Committee, to whom was referred request of Amalgamated Painters to aid in securing a charter for them from the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers. The committee submitted the following, which was adopted: "That the application be referred to the Executive Council of the A. F. of L., with the request that they use their good offices with the Amalgamated Painters to affiliate with Local Union No. 368, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers." Recommendation adopted.

From Bricklayers' Union, No. 1, asking that Chapin & Sacks be removed from the unfair list, contingent upon their signing a Central Labor Union contract, the differences with that firm having been settled with that union. Referred to Contract Committee.

From Samuel Gompers, president of American Federation of Labor, asking financial aid for the textile workers at Lowell, Mass.

From Local 240, R. C. I. P. A., stating that the following additional contracts had been secured for union drug stores: A. N. Conner, 1542 Seventh street northwest; Lane's Pharmacy, 524 Second street northwest; Koonce's Pharmacy, New Jersey avenue and H street northwest; J. W. Stone, 1101 Third street southeast.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Carpet Upholsterers called attention to fact that P. Grogan had been on unfair list for two years. Grievance Committee was requested to take that case up for action.

Milk Wagon Drivers called attention to the Sharon Dairy being still unfair.

The Waiters called attention to their green button and asked for support for it at all times.

The Grievance Committee requested that Thomas Somerville & Sons be placed on unfair list on action of Washington Lodge, No. 193, I. A. M., and that H. J. Wheelock, electrician, be placed on unfair list, on action of Electrical Workers, No. 26. Report concurred in.

The Building Trades Section reported that the entertainment recently given by that branch was a success.

On motion, the protest of Lanis Association of Steam Fitters relative to recent action in taking Yale Laundry from unfair list was taken from the table. The matter was then referred to the Grievance Committee.

Adjourned.

A Good Place to Eat.

The establishment of Michael Hennessey, 216 Ninth street northwest, opposite the Center Market, can always be depended upon to provide a good meal from the best products of the Center Market. His coffee, tea, whiskies, and cigars are unsurpassed. He lately purchased the lease, and has shown great judgment, based upon 16 years' experience in the business, in fitting it up in a superb manner with the aid of union labor exclusively. He now is desirous of welcoming his many friends. When down town drop in.

JUST EVERY-DAY LIFE.

When Messrs. Calhoon, Huston, and the souvenir committee complete that publication they will have accumulated an artistic collection of the faces of the trusties and celebrities of Washington printerdom.

As speedily as practicable I would like to see the trustees of No. 101 purchase one of the buildings adjoining the Typographical Temple and add to the floor space of that institution. The American Federation of Labor has long since outgrown its quarters, and desks are now being placed in the main assembly room to accommodate its employees. The banquet hall, it will be remembered, was placed at their disposal some months since.

A. P. E. Doyle, since taking charge of the New Century Publishing House, has, in addition to stocking the office with new fonts and appurtenances, introduced a number of methods worthy of emulation.

The other day, down in the Georgia wiregrass, close to the Alabama line, a boy was born, and in the naming of the child the mother recalled a friendship, formed in the biking days of '98, of individuals whose birthplace and environment were far removed, yet which lasted until one of them crossed over the river to rest under the shade of the trees. The name of the babe is Charles E. Young Simrill.

Right now is a good time to insist upon the indiscriminate placing of names on the honorary roll of Columbia Union. One hesitates to interpose an objection when a member rises to perform a kindly office for an associate of former years, yet the membership will agree with me that such action is a growing evil.

Washington has a lady ex-delegate to the International in the person of Mrs. R. A. Julian, that lady having been elected, more than once, I believe, to represent Kearney, Neb.

Current Success contains sketches and photographs of the young men who assist President Roosevelt in running Uncle Sam's Colossal Aggregation, among others being that of Oscar J. Ricketts, which reminds me: About the time the Census people were having trouble with their transfers I was proceeding Avenueward, when I encountered a lady of my acquaintance employed in that bureau. "Not working to-day?" was my greeting. "I'm off for a couple of hours," was her reply, "and I'm going over to that printing office and learn old man Ricketts his business!" You can imagine the situation when I ungallantly blurted, "Why, Ricketts isn't as old as you are!"

I can hear the clods fall on the coffin of Lady Isabel and Capitola Black when I read that Bonner's Ledger was sold for a paltry $6,000. Robert Bonner paid a greater sum for a single advertisement; for any one of scores of serials; to any number of contributors. Like when Greeley and Dana departed the Tribune and Sun, the brains of the institution went with the clay. The wreck has been purchased, I understand, by the publishers of Every Month and The Household, who will consolidate the several publications under the name of the Household Ledger.

When a little tad I may have missed a meal occasionally, but never a copy of the Ledger. I can repeat to-day paragraphs learned then from the "Hidden Hand" and "East Lynne." There was one Ledger serial with the scene laid in Smoky Row, Nashville. Reaching the Tennessee capital some years later in life, no time was lost in looking up Smoky Row.

Robert Bonner "made" Henry Ward Beecher and Mrs. E. D. N. Southworth, and in so doing gave to the world stability of thought and a field of fiction, the latter peopled with fairest forms from the realms of Fancy and Romance.

THE MANILA PRINTING OFFICE

Meaning the Bureau of Public Printing of the Philippines.

WONDERFUL RESULTS REACHED

Great Amount of Work Accomplished Since Its Institution—Nothing Too Big to Be Undertaken—Model Plant and an Easy Berth—System and Order Maintained.

MANILA, P. I., April 22, 1903.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

A model of apportionment and modern equipment, inviting comparison to the greatest American printing houses of to-day, the plant of the Bureau of Public Printing of the Philippine Archipelago stands as a monument to the creative and executive ability of John S. Leech, Public Printer.

To convey some idea of the importance of this Bureau to the Philippine Government it is only necessary to state that the total output of finished product per month amounts to over $25,000 gold. The pay-roll averages $10,000 gold for the same period. Over two hundred employes, skilled and unskilled, are carried on the time rolls of the several departments and embrace in nationality American, Spanish, Filipino, Japanese, Chinese, Russian, and East Indians.

The varieties of orders executed by the Bureau includes every class of work known to printers, binders, pressmen, and engravers. Individual orders for printing range from one hundred labels to five million provincial forms bound in books of a thousand each and numbered and perforated; from quarter bindings for stub books to extra Russia ends and bands and patent backs for ledgers; from paper covers to full levant morocco with embossed titles for publications; from engraved revenue stamps, ordered in $100,000-lots and in twenty denominations, to half tones in three colors. An order is now being executed calling for ten thousand record stub books of two hundred and fifty leaves each, that involves on expenditure of over thirteen hundred reams of double cap writing paper. The reputation of the Bureau of Public Printing was established by the execution of a time-limit order from the new Philippine Census Bureau for six million pieces of printed matter and six thousand portfolios for use of enumerators, the execution of which required three thousand reams of ledger paper and eight tons of binders' boards. The last delivery on this order was made ten days previous to the expiration of the specified date. Under the system inaugurated for handling the work of the Bureau this order was executed without any delay in the delivery of routine work.

The following table gives the official title and compensation received by the persons named:

The American skilled employes are all officially classed as instructors. This classification is the result of the policy inaugurated by the United States Government of instructing the natives in both professional and mechanical pursuits. Taking into consideration the fact that this archipelago is the home of the Filipino, and that the average Government employe's stay in the islands is limited to stated periods, it is only right and just that if the native shows an inclination to rise above the occupation of a common laborer he should be given the opportunity. The question of Philippine native labor ever coming into competition with American labor is too absurd to be here discussed.

Seven hours constitute a day's work in the Bureau of Public Printing, with a Saturday half holiday. The hours of labor are from 8 to 12 and from 3 to 6. On Saturdays the hours are from 8 to 12.30 only. Twenty per cent extra is paid for all overtime. Double time is paid for all labor performed on Sundays and legal holidays in addition to the regular pay allowed for these days.

The actual operation of the plant dates from June 15, 1902, the completion of the building being so far advanced on that date as to be deemed advisable to take over all Government orders previously given out by contract to private firms. Large orders had been held up for months by the Civil Government to be filled by the new Bureau, and when the floodgates were raised an avalanche of work poured into the office with instructions to "rush." Up to this time the confidence imposed in the executive ability of the men selected to take charge of the different departments had prevented any instructions being issued as to how they should conduct their rooms and handle the work. Operations started off under the most favorable conditions, but soon it was apparent that there was something radically wrong. Some departments were working full handed; others were running light, with machines idle. There was work in the building for every employe and every machine. A lack of executive management was the cause. In forwarding work from one department to another, no judgment was used as to what particular class of work that department was in need of to keep everything moving, nor did anybody seem to care. Inflated individual importance was prevalent throughout the mechanical departments. It was an insult to dignity to even make a suggestion or ask for information of a business nature of certain foremen. Orders for printing were increasing day by day and congesting in every department. Something had to be done. The Commission would soon be making inquiries of a pertinent nature. The situation settled down to two propositions: Would the Public Printer let the Bureau be run by a few American employees at their pleasure or would he run it in the interest of the Government on a sound business basis? The climax was reached by one of the foremen positively refusing to start up a certain piece of machinery that was standing idle when ordered to do by the Public Printer. Before many hours that foreman was reduced to a journeyman and an entire stranger installed in his position. From that day on there was a marked improvement. No more reductions were necessary. Orders were issued from the office of the chief clerk and complied with by the heads of departments. A schedule of work for each job was placed on the jacket that accompanied the order and had to be strictly followed.

Under the system devised and in operation in the Bureau, a daily progress slip is made out for each individual job in the room in which it has been forwarded and filed with the duplicate jacket in the office, so that when inquiry is made as to the condition of that particular order information can be instantly given. An individual record system is also in operation that shows the ability of every employee. No hardships have been worked. It was either a case of "do or be done."

A word of commendation is now in order. The proof room, under the able management of Mr. Gessler, has been conducted with excellence; the bindery, under Mr. Allen; the foundry, under Mr. Rouzee, and the photo engraving room, under Mr. Lanman, have all given entire satisfaction. The press room, since Mr. Bollinger was appointed, has "made good." Incidentally, a wrong impression seems to have gained credence through certain sources in regard to the foreman of the press room. Mr. Bollinger carries a current working card of the San Francisco Printing Pressmen's Union, No. 24.

In conclusion, the Public Printer is running the Bureau of Public Printing from the composing-room to the powerhouse, and resignation blanks are to be had in the office.

REPRESENTATION IN I. T. U.

Interesting Study of Lack of Representation by Smaller Unions.

PERCENTAGE SHOWN BY TABLE

Proposition to Be Presented at the Coming Session—Only 28 Per Cent Represented at Last Session—Expense of Delegates Should Be Met Through the I. T. U.

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

As the next I. T. U. convention is to be held here it may not be out of place to discuss in THE TRADES UNIONIST a proposition which will be presented for consideration at the meeting in August. This proposition has for its object securing the representation of the smaller unions in the annual conventions. Every union at the present time has the right to send one or more delegates. All the large unions are regularly represented, those having a moderate number of members send delegates or not, according to cost; but the smaller organizations are almost wholly unrepresented. Surprising as it may seem, the official report of Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood shows that only 27 per cent of the typographical unions of the country were represented at Cincinnati, and the percentage of all unions represented under the I. T. U. was only 28. These did the legislating for the other 72 per cent.

In order that a thorough understanding of conditions may be had, the figures have been carefully examined and a table prepared showing results. It is as follows:

THE UNREPRESENTED IN I. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

Unions.	Number of unions.	Represented.	Not represented.	Per cent not represented.	Number of members.	Represented.	Not represented.	Per cent not represented.
Typographical	497	134	363	73	37,419	27,552	9,867	26
Mailers	16	6	8	43	474	604	170	22
German-American	21	4	17	80	957	196	761	80
Photo-Engravers	18	2	16	89	437	196	241	55
Type Founders	6	2	4	66	479	156	323	67
News Writers	7	.....	7	100	126	.....	126	100
Totals	565	148	415	72	40,192	28,604	11,588	28¾

The above shows an alarmingly large proportion of the membership unrepresented. They pay their per capita tax and are faithful members; but by reason of poverty alone they are unable to take part in the annual convention which governs the welfare of the craft. Hardly any one will assert that they do not deserve just consideration. The larger unions can easily care for themselves in this particular, and in so doing they have paid very little attention to the small unions. As unions having only 7 to 25 members can not afford to pay expenses of delegates it is plain that such expenses should be met from another source, and the best one is the I. T. U. treasury. At the same time this source should be properly protected. It would be manifestly unfair to pay expenses every year for delegates from all small unions. The money laid out in this way would be more than these organizations pay into the I. T. U. treasury in several years. Hence the idea is suggested that these small unions be formed in districts or combinations, a delegate selected from each in turn, and the expenses paid by the I. T. U. The basis would be a delegate for 100 to 125 members, the unions having over 100 members to be allowed representation as at present. This would bring delegates from the small towns.

As a further measure of protection to the I. T. U. treasury an assessment of 50 cents per member should be levied for convention expenses. It might not require the full amount, and if there were any surplus or deficit the balance either way could be settled out of I. T. U. general funds. With the further precaution that payment to delegates should be made through local union officers after the delegates' return and report, the danger of non-appearance at the meeting would be obviated. With the compensation fixed at $5 a day and traveling expenses, each representative would have enough for his necessary outlay. If he wanted any extras he could pay for them himself or his local organization could grant him an additional allowance.

This proposition was presented at the Cincinnati convention in two forms, one by Mr. Hill, of Nashville, Tenn., and the other by myself. Neither received favorable recommendation by the Committee on Laws, and the convention concurred in the committee report. The propositions are printed in full in the convention proceedings on page 132. It is quite likely the same thing will come up in the August convention, and then a different course may be pursued.

Capital and Labor.

With the above caption as the topic of discussion, the American Social Science Association met in Boston last Thursday and presented some interesting ideas. Mr. L. D. Brandis, an attorney, said on the subject of incorporation of unions, that "a union, although a voluntary unincorporated association, is legally responsible for its acts in much the same way that an individual, a partnership, or a corporation is responsible," but that is more difficult for the plantiff to conduct the litigation. Professor Wambaugh, of the Harvard Law School, also held that unions are legally responsible though unincorporated. But he added that "the incorporation of trade unions, though attended with a few conveniences, is unnecessary and dangerous"—the danger of trade unionists combining with capital in disregard of the interests of the public.

President Eliot, of Harvard, summarized the question of incorporation of trade unions in the statement that if they wanted it there seemed to be no objection and if they did not want it there was no good reason for compelling them. There was moreover an objection to the imposition of a money penalty, and this whole talk of incorporating trades unions was fairly attributable to a desire to get at them and impose a fine or collect damages. "To attempt to get at them vindicatively by inducing or compelling incorporation and making them financially liable is not at all the way to settle the problem."

A solution was offered by the President of the Association, Mr. Oscar S. Straus. Taking for his subject "Industrial Peace," he said: "The greatest obstacle to industrial peace is not selfishness, but the tyranny of ignorance and uneconomic demands," but with the reasonable lessening of the hours of labor and the widening opportunities for education, the laboring class is certainly making great intellectual progress. "I have no panacea to offer as a solution of the relations of capital and labor. The solution lies along the lines of evolution, and in my judgment the first step will be by organization on the part of employers in their respective branches of industry." This is along the lines followed in the printing trade, in which we have the International Typographical Union and the Typothetae as the two main forces.

Another Incorporation Scheme to Forge Fetters for Labor.

One of the most subtly constructed bills aimed at trade unions was the one introduced by Senator TRACY in the Legislature of the State of Connecticut. Substantially, the bill provides that trade unions "may" incorporate by stating the name of the union, the purposes, the methods of action, duties of officers, and terms of admission to membership. It appears, therefore, that the trade unions have the permissive right to incorporate, and the bill then proceeds to provide that any employer who shall discharge an employe because of membership in a union thus incorporated shall be subject to a fine of $500, and any employer of labor who shall discharge an employe because "not" a member of a union shall be subject to the same penalty; that any officer of a union, or "any member thereof," demanding of an employer the discharge of any employe because "not" a member of a union shall be subject to a fine of $1,000, or six months' imprisonment, or both.

It will thus be seen that a union which "may" become incorporated would be absolutely prohibited from deciding whether it will or will not accept co employment with non-union men.

For instance, an employer agreeing to use the union label implies necessarily that the union label shall cover the product of union members only. In the event of the employer failing to carry out that agreement, the union would insist that unless the employes become union members the union label would be withdrawn, and this in itself would make the union, its officers or members, liable to a fine of $1,000, or six months' imprisonment, or both.

Another provision of this friendly (?) bill for the incorporation of trade unions has it that the members of a union in the employ of any corporation proposing to enter upon a strike must give the corporation previous notice of not less than fourteen days, or be subject to a fine of not less than $5—how much more than $5 the bill does not state. Any person who shall threaten "social" ostracism, or who shall attempt to prevent the employment of any person in places made vacant by striking workmen, shall be subject to a fine of not less than $100. These provisions are intended to prohibit union workmen from withdrawing from the same "social" circle, from the same church, or from the same club of which an offensive person may be a member, and makes it an offense to even ask a workman at any time, or under any circumstances, not to take a striking workman's place.

These are the benefits which are supposed to accrue to unions if they become incorporated The inducements, we suppose, some faddists will believe to be large, but to the ordinary mind it would seem as if the intention is to provide penalties galore without the slightest scintilla of counteracting advantage.—American Federationist.

FLOTSAM AND JETSAM.

The article copied in this paper last week from "Sadie Maguire's" (Frank Kennedy's) Omaha Western Laborer suggests the possibilities of the Women's Auxiliaries in the interest of organized labor. The wives of workingmen are the purchasers for their families, and through their hands pass the greater portion of the wages of toil. By organizing them and teaching them the doctrine that nothing but union-made goods shall be bought with union men's money, a weapon will be placed in our hands more potent and effective than the strike and the boycott combined. The wages of workingmen keep the wheels of commerce moving; the man who works from Monday morning until Saturday night, expending his money during the following week for the necessities and comforts of his family, is the factor without which all industries cease or run at low ebb. The movement is new. It is but beginning in printers' families even, but I hope the time is near when it will extend to the wives and daughters in all trades. The name of the wife, mother, sister, and daughter of every printer and every workingman should be enrolled in such an organization, and when that is done, when they issue their fiat it will have greater effect than any boycott of a trades union.

* * * *

Charlie Sheldon told me the other day that the Troy Times (Troy is Sheldon's old home), that has been a rat office for twenty-five years, has lately been unionized. Outside of Philadelphia there is scarcely an important paper in the country that is not printed by union men—at least within my knowledge. Philadelphia has been unfortunate in having a large number of non-union men employed there, but they are being rapidly gathered in lately, and I have hopes of seeing the old city made a union stronghold.

* * * *

John L. Kennedy, though now for several years unconnected with the printing business, has recently given in his name to the Ex-Delegates' Association for membership and paid up the nine months' dues in full. He had at first declined to become a member because he believed that the association should be composed of active members of the Union, but learning that many who have long been disconnected with printing are in full membership, he gave in his name. Mr. Kennedy was president of this union in 1890–1891 and delegate to the Chicago convention in 1893. It was under his administration that the Typographical Temple was begun and nearly completed, and he has rendered Columbia Union much valuable service. There have been times that I have differed with him as to union matters, but I take pleasure in giving him full credit for successful work.

* * * *

We have not yet received into the Ex-Delegates' Association all who should have become members, though some have excusably remained out because of ill-health. But there are others, some of whom have enjoyed all the honors which the Union could confer, in years past, who have refused to become members, probably because of waning interest in the active work of the Union, for I can not think that the trifling expense of 25 cents a week has been in any case a factor. Of course it is too much to expect that those who were delegates twenty-five or thirty years ago should feel the deep interest which animates us young fellows, though we have far the greater number of the older ones enrolled; but we naturally feel encouraged to find those who were wheel horses when we were children working enthusiastically beside us. We are going to have the greatest convention this year in the history of the I. T. U., and Ex-Delegates' day will be the red-letter day of this greatest convention.

* * * *

The other day I had quite a chat with W. H. Hickman, who has been a great sufferer for a year or more with what had been diagnosed as rheumatism, but which proves to be, under the skillful investigation of Dr. Chadwick, to be an osseous growth on the femoral bone. He feels much encouraged and hopes, now that the trouble has been located, that he will be given relief and that a permanent cure will be effected. I hope the intimate relationship which has subsisted between Mr. Hickman and myself for considerably over a quarter of a century may be considered as sufficient warrant for this mention and that my motive may not be questioned by those whose jealously is aroused lest their peculiar province be encroached upon.

"Yes, boys, we have been here a long time," said Wallace Brewer. "I can remember when there were no short galleys in the office."

"Short galleys!" said Clem Harding, contemptuously, "I can remember when they first began to use italic figures."

"Italic figures!" snorted Charlie Otis, "I can remember when proofreaders had to sharpen their pencils with a knife."

"Humph!" snarled Jim Maloney, "I can remember when they used to hoist the blueball, the maltese cross, and the the diamond, and when they had to cut all their rules."

"You're all youngsters," said Johnny Higgins. "I can remember when Bill Sweeney first came in the office."

"I duck!" shouted the others, in chorus.

"Foxy Charlie" is his name—
Giving pencils gave him fame.
When he wants to work the gang
He sings a song he's often sang:
"Have a pencil!
Have a pencil!
It is yours without a cent to pay!
Have a pencil!
Have a pencil!"
And he always works the gang that way!

"I vote as I shot during the war," said the Veteran, proudly.

"I don't doubt that," said the Dirty, Low, Mean Man, "but I wouldn't tell it if I were you."

"Why wouldn't you tell it?" asked the Veteran, fiercely.

"Because you shot as you were ordered to shoot, didn't you?"

And they went in and bit off one.

* * * *

"If I got as good wages as you printers," said a Navy-Yard machinist, "I'd be willing to pay dues to the union—and belong to it."

"If you all belonged to the union you would soon be getting as much money as we get," said the printer.

And then they spent 'bout two weeks' dues
In a couple of rounds of booze.

I met J. L. Rodier on the street the other day and he authorized me to say that he never contemplated and never at any time said he intended contesting the election of John R. Purvis as a delegate, and that he had nothing but contempt for a man who, having gone into an election under an agreed condition of affairs, would refuse to abide by the result, although he believes that our election law is unconstitutional and would be so declared by the convention. This may quiet perturbed minds as to Rodier's intentions and will undoubtedly be a great relief to some who consider the law loaded to hit if it is a deer and miss if it is a calf.

The last word that I had from Waudby was to the effect that about 800 labor organizations have indorsed him and that the good work is going on satisfactorily. If he does not win it will be because the working people have not influence enough to get the one position created in their interest.

* * * *

There is a strong effort being made to have Edgar Meritt appointed a member of the Laws Committee of the I. T. U., a position for which his splendid mental abilities and legal training eminently qualify him. The appointment is in the gift of President Lynch, who will undoubtedly have great respect for the wishes of so powerful a union as Columbia.

* * * *

It grieves me to see his membership in a fraternal insurance order made the basis of the claim of a business man on the patronage of members of that order, especially when circulars making the claim are erroneously directed to persons who are not members.

A letter from F. W. Parks, who was employed for some time in the Census printing office, locates him now as in Cleveland. He went from here to New York and thence to Pittsburg. He is "learning the machine."

* * * *

William J. Bollman, for fifteen years secretary of Philadelphia Union, died a few days ago from locomotor ataxia, with which he had been afflicted for many years.

* * * *

Harvey G. Ellis, who is a special examiner of the Pension Office, as he has been for years, represented Columbia Union at Toronto in 1881, when R. W. Kerr and F. C. O'Neill were his associates, and both he and Mr. Kerr are members of the Ex-Delegates' Association, Mr. O'Neill having died nearly twenty years ago. Mr. Ellis fears that he will not be in the city during the convention, as his duties take him away from the city much of the time. He was for a number of years a proofreader on the Record and in other departments of the office before going to the Pension Office. Whether he is able to be at the convention or not, his heart will be with us, and it will be a sore disappointment to him if he is unable to be present and meet the scores of old-timers who were prominent when he was.

Baseball!

EDITORS THE TRADES UNIONIST:

Propositions having been received from the managers of printers' baseball teams of New York and Baltimore, and as the Chicago delegation to the International Typographical Union, which meets here in August, will be accompanied by a baseball team of printers from the Windy City, it has been suggested that Columbia Union organize a team and accept these propositions. A meeting will he held at Typographical Temple, Sunday, June 7, at 3 p. m., for the purpose above stated. All members of Columbia Union who are interested, both from a playing and non-playing standpoint, are requested to attend and help boost the scheme. Columbia Union possesses considerable talent in its ranks, and assurance is felt that a team worthy of the Union can be organized. Nothing will be lost, however, by considering the project, and it is hoped that all who can attend the meeting will do so and by their presence lend enthusiasm.

AROUND THE PRINTERIES.

Down Town.

The reporter wrote: "Industrial School for Colored Youths," and the intelligent compositor made it read: "Industrial Shoal for Colored Yachts," on an evening paper in this city this week.

George F. Halsey, of the Sixth Division, left for New York Thursday to accompany Mrs. Halsey, who sails on the steamer Coama for San Juan, Porto Rico, Saturday, making an extended visit among friends. Before returning she will spend a month in Cuba.

W. E. Shields, proofreader on the Daily Times, has resigned and left last Saturday for Baltimore, where he will resume his old place as head proof reader on the Sun. He was very well pleased with his position here, but Mrs. Shields was affected by the altitude, and could not live here and enjoy good health.—Colorado Chronicle.

In a letter to this office from Lon A. Shimp, who is now official printer in the Yellowstone Park for the Association in charge of that beautiful and romantic reservation, says: "I think every printer who leaves Washington, and feels any interest in affairs of the craft, should have THE TRADES UNIONIST follow him. The cost is so small and the benefit accruing from it so large, it is more than a fair exchange to the traveler."

It won't take much of your valuable time to help put Otis on the "run,"
And you will be doing your duty, besides enjoying the fun,
By writing one of his foreign advertisers a letter,
And by this simple remedy make Otis wiser and better.

There was a phalanx of two machines Sunday night, the first time since New Year's.

John L. Kennedy has returned from his Western trip, and called around to show us how well he looked.

Frank Lane, well-known down town and in Swampoodle, now has a position in the printery at the Navy-Yard.

From the numerous and caustic remarks heard about the sick benefit association in the G. P. O, which had its printing done in Baltimore, it is evi dent that the association is not much thought of down town.

Providence is good to our delegate-elect. Last Sunday night the main belt running the machines ran off, and while assisting in replacing it one of the oil cups fell from the shafting and just "skint" his nose.

"Little Joe," our telegraph boy, had the misfortune to lose his bicycle Saturday night. While up in the editor's room delivering his telegraph he left his wheel in front of the building, and some one captured it. Up to date the police have failed to locate it.

During the week a friend approached me and inquired what I would advise to be done to make our label prominent and cause it to be demanded by those having printing done. This is what I did to him:

Why, that's easy! Advertise it well, my boy!
And also advertise those who use it.
Then people who want to have printing done
Won't have to ask where they can find it.
A newspaper is just the thing;
Try it; see the results it will bring.

Omaha, Nebr., labor unions have set us a good precedent to follow. They secured an injunction restraining the business men from refusing to sell goods to dealers who employ union labor; restraining the Business Men's Association from holding meetings or conspiring against the unions, or in any way interfering with the unions in the management of their affairs. Wonder how it feels to be hit with your own club?

There's many a slip 'twixt now and the trip
Which you expect to take to St. Louis;
But be good, my boy, and never get flip,
And we'll send you, b'gosh, if it breaks us.

A. MATEUR.

Wm. H. Covert is at home ill.

W. H. Davis was reinstated in this room last Wednesday.

Will A. Morris came down from the Job Room last Monday.

Henry S. Allen is with as again after a slight attack of typhoid.

John Williams loses as much time by trains being late from Baltimore as would pay his house rent here in Washington. Where's the economy?

C. W. Kelly received his permanent appointment one day last week. W. E. Denneson also received his appointment last Friday. Denny did the honors to his alley mates like Kelly did.

This Australian system of holding Union elections may be all right in theory, but it is not in practice. At present it keeps the membership all stewed up for a month before election and creates jealousies and heartburnings and bad feelings that takes years to obliterate and make enemies that once were friends. The old system of having the polls opened at the Union rooms is the best, and let all those who care to go down there and vote. Those who do not care who runs the affairs of the Union can go about their business, feeling confident that the one receiving a majority of the votes cast will have the ability to carry on the business of the Union in an economical manner or they would not have been elected. Then let us go back to the good old days when the polls were opened up at the Temple and get rid of all this hub-bub around our several places of employment and the candidate can buzz to his heart's content in our ears on the streets, and it is much more secret. After the vote is counted there will be no after-explanations. One could then go into the booth and vote for the candidate they wished to. This thing of a defeated candidate holding you up on the street and saying: "I thought you were a better friend of mine; you only got me 23 votes out of III!" would then be a thing of the past. Let some one introduce a motion to this effect and push it along so as to be in time for next election.

Death of E. C. Crump.

Mr. E. C. Crump, an old-time member of Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, died at his residence in this city last Tuesday morning. Mr. Crump was 72 years of age at the time of his death. He served Columbia Union as vice-president in 1884, and was one of the vice-presidents of the I. T. U. for a term, having been a delegate to that body from Richmond, Va., his former home. His remains were sent to Richmond for interment.

A Promising Excursion.

The second annual excursion of the Bartenders' International League, No. 75, takes place Monday, June 15, at Marshall Hall, one of the most popular summer resorts. Since last year the membership of the League has increased wonderfully, due largely to the administrative ability of Jere F. McCarthy, its indefatigable secretary, who is the popular president of the B. U. Club, 905 E street northwest. J. J. Crowley, manager, or M. Howard, the able assistant secretary, either of these gentlemen, will supply information how to become a member upon application.

Yale Laundry

DECLARED UNFAIR

BY THE R. A. LANIS ASSOCIATION

The "Yale Steam Laundry" prefers "scabs" to do their steam fitting. Where do you and your friends have your washing done? Help the Union Steam Fitters by refusing your patronage to the Yale Laundry.

R. A. LANIS ASS'N OF STEAM FITTERS

March 10, 1903. L. B. No. 10, N. A.

BUILDING TRADES COUNCIL.

The regular weekly meeting of the Council of Allied Building Trades of the Central Labor Union was called to order at the usual hour on Tuesday evening, Chairman Meitzler presiding and Secretary Ratigan at his desk.

The roll call disclosed the presence of 31 delegates from 16 local unions.

Minutes of previous meeting read and approved.

Credentials from the Paperhangers' Local Union No. 420, certifying to H. J. Wells, H. M. Yost, and H. Iradella were read, and the delegates seated.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Delegate Ratigan reported the Yale Laundry matter placed in hands of Grievance Committee of Central Labor Union.

From the Entertainment Committee, Delegate Van Ness reported that the recent entertainment was a pronounced success. Delegate Stevens requested that delegates endeavor to have their unions make reports on tickets at earliest possible date.

A vote of thanks was extended to Federal Labor Union, No. 8193, and Women's Union Label Auxiliary for favors received.

The Executive Committee reports of meetings of May 27, 31, and June 2 were accepted.

CALL OF UNIONS.

Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers reported that the Joseph P. Mathey Company, 1918 Pennsylvania avenue northwest; W. S. Jenks, 717 Seventh street northwest; T. J. Killigan, 1713 Seventh street northwest, and James E. Albinson, 1802 Fourteenth street northwest, were unfair to their union, and asked the enforcement of card against these shops.

Lanis Association of Steam Fitters reported that Yale Laundry matter was before the Grievance Committee of the Central Labor Union.

Steam Fitters' Helpers asked that Executive Committee send for their contract.

Hoisting Engineers reported employment of nonunion engineers on pumping station, foot of New Jersey avenue.

NEW BUSINESS.

The organizer was instructed to take up question of organization of slag roofers.

The secretary was instructed to carry out the provisions of Article III, section 3, relative to absence of delegates from meetings of the Council.

The Business Agent made his report of work covered during the week, and the report was accepted.

Second Division.

Every knock is a boost.

Ting-a-ling! Slug 21! telephone!

The Second now has a standing sick committee.

Daniel Hallock spent part of his holiday at Congress Heights.

W. L. Wilmoth has been sick for a few days. He is expected back to work soon.

Foreman Hickman was confined to his home a few days last week for medical treatment.

Our genial and accommodating "objectionable" distributor, H. C. Shearer, has been off a few days with some slight illness.

Horse talk is all the copy we have had for a turn-in. If any of us ever own a Bucephalus we will know how to care for him.

Ask Cheshire to tell you about the magic tricks in legerdemain that Prestidigitator Max Knoble performs in the manipulation of type.

Messrs. Delahunty, Hawley, McFadyen, and Dement have been distributing black letter for several weeks, except when "copyright" is running.

Miss Bertie Sousa, of Houston, Tex., a niece of Ben A. Wolf, spent a few days in Washington this week. She is on her way home from a visit to New York City.

The International Ladies' Auxiliary have issued a nice button, which the members will wear, especially when shopping, to show why they demand union-made products.

J. S. Garner went to Gettysburg Decoration Day. He was very much impressed by the scenes which brought to mind the stirring incidents of the "late unpleasantness."

W. F. Simons claims to know something about baseball. He says neither the Washington nor Second Division clubs can get any lower in the average column unless they go below the dash rule.

With great floods in the West, storms in the South, and strikes in the East, famine in China, earthquakes in Asia, Providence is very kind to us here. Let us not forget the more unfortunate in our bounty.

The rumor committee does not seem to be in good working order about the move into the new building. They announced that the Second was to have been moved Saturday and Sunday, but we are still here.

W. F. Reed, of the Sixth, formerly of the Second, has developed into quite a pen and ink artist under the influence of Spess averages. He was exhibiting the other day a good picture of a woebegone, tottering figure, "Passing a Run-Down on Spess."

The progressive printer is not only a persistent reader, keeping up with general events, but keeps informed on the the doings of his craft through his trade paper. Seventy-five per cent of this division are subscribers to THE TRADES UNIONIST. Be sociable. Send in your subscription.

W. R. Branham set out for a tour through Wonderland (New York City) last Friday, returning Tuesday. He was not disappointed in the outside of the city. He says he did not have time to take in the inside. Probably he would not have come back if he had seen the inside.

No union movement has made a greater record in organization and accomplished more good than the International Ladies' Auxiliary in the past nine months. Printers of 101 should interest their families in this pleasant and profitable work. They can not benefit themselves more in any other way. Explain to them the benefits of unionism.

While the general sanitary condition of the G. P. O. is of the highest grade, yet there never was a system that could not be improved. The most dread disease in this country, and especially among printers, is consumption. It is contracted mainly from breathing air charged with the expectoration of those afflicted with the disease. An eminent physician told this correspondent that, at an expense of 25 cents a day, the sawdust in the spittoons in this office could be rendered impervious to the communication of this disease.

Specification Notes.

When you call for a smoke, don't forget to mention a label cigar.

Four weeks more and then we take up our frames and walk—to the main office.

H. L. Colestock has taken eighty days' leave. He will enter on a course of tuition at Harvard.

Those copper spaces the Sixth Division men brought with them are all right in a tight pinch.

Miss Katherine K. Spencer is one of those detailed on the extra force as copyholder at the main office.

A brother of Harry Billings since leaving the office has become foreman of the Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.

Perhaps "Pard" Bloomer may be able to materialize some Meritt cigars in this room. I haven't seen any.

Theodore Roosevelt's elegant work, "Winning of the West," is a striking portrayal of the early days of the Republic.

I am indebted to members of this chapel for items of interest and information. Such co-operation is commendable.

The mother of John R. Sturgis passed away Tuesday morning at 3 o'clock. The chapel testified its sympathy by a floral offering.

The Women's Bindery Union Relief Association will give an excursion to Chesapeake Beach Wednesday, June 10. Tickets may be had of slug 99.

Coming up Seventh street a few evenings since I observed the photos of four well-known faces—Public Printer Palmer, Captain Brian, Captain Ramsey, and Secretary Garrett.

James T. Ray, a compositor of this division, invited his father to visit the largest chapel in the world last week. The Specification chapel is the largest, numbering, as it does, about 290 people.

Life is becoming more and more esthetic and refined. A Ninth-street eating saloon employs a piano, and your knife and fork keep time to the delicious strains of Strauss, "My Creole Girl," or "Hiawatha."

Mr. Jason Waterman, of the proof room, was the recipient of the $100 prize at Columbian University of Law, and his friends of the Specification Division presented him with a copy of Bouvier's Law Dictionary.

O'Rourke, in "A Celebrated Case," at the Lafayette, states that "a man can not commit a crime one evening and the next morning act as a hero on the battlefield," which shows that Mr. O'Rourke had a true insight into human nature.

Harry Keefer, who died in a hospital at Philadelphia recently, was a compositor there along in the 70's. He was an intimate friend of J. F. Hauer, a master of the Masonic lodge at Frederick, Md., a postmaster, and secretary of agriculture.

The Court of Claims was to have rendered a decision Monday in regard to employees of the G. P. O. having thirty days' leave instead of twenty-six, as is the privilege of the other Departments. It was, however, postponed until October 30. W. H. Taylor is presenting the claim.

A harmless inmate of St. Elizabeth's has the liberty of the city's streets. He usually carries a bouquet, and thinks the sun is a man and the moon a woman. He is closely related to a prominent official of the Government, and at one time held a responsible position himself.

The curious little creature which created so much curiosity last week came up from the coast of South Carolina in a shipload of fish, and is known as the puffer or globe fish. It has the remarkable power of suddenly puffing itself up with air or water, causing it to look like a globe or balloon. Hence its name.

Charles Abernathy was reinstated last Monday, and holds forth on slug 44.

Mrs. R. A. Nelgner and daughter left last Monday for a visit to Kansas and Missouri.

S. Th. Westdal graduates from the National Law School to-morrow. The exercises will take place at the National Theater.

E. A. Abernathy, of the Agricultural Branch, formerly of this division, graduates from the Columbia University this week as an M. D.

Ed. Nash came up last Tuesday and received the congratulations of the boys upon his recovery from an attack of pneumonia. His short stay in the hospital pulled him down 35 pounds.

Ed. Heidingsfeld went to New York last week to attend the Brooklyn races. By some unknown law of psychology Irish Lad, which rewarded him so handsomely last year, failed to attract his attention at the recent meet at which it won the handicap.

On his way home through the rain one day last week D. S. Walton received a sudden and unexpected bath. He was crossing on a plank over an excavation, from which he slipped and fell into water up to his neck. Climbing out of the hole, he wended his way homeward with an utter indifference to further protection of his umbrella.

The G. P. O. Baseball League has purchased a pennant, which of course adds interest to the game. Following is the percentage of standing to date:

Al Eshelman is wearing a large nigh blooming cereus.

Dan Foley has had his "think tank" shaved and polished.

Al McGurk reports that the Sunday closing law in Alexandria is an entire sucress.

Tim McKenna is loosing flesh since his wife went away. Cause—Cooking for himself.

Charles Bentzel is singing at one of the Baltimore summer resorts. Charles will be O. K. when he gets the knot holes extracted from his voice.

The entire output of several breweries has been secured by the chaperones Kelly and Baur, who are determined to fill the hides of all visitors, with "suds."

Gus Baur, Sam Childs, Wilson Clarke, Billy Kelley, and other Baltimoreans have organized for the purpose of highway Jobbing. They secured their first victim last Saturday.

The place is Chesapeake Beach. The date is Wednesday, June 10th. Don't forget it The Womens Bindery Union Excursion. The ladies will be greatly pleased if the pressman, printers, and binders will bring their babies and the ladies. Send your wives early in the day and let them enjoy the days outing and you can catch a train from the Junction at 5 10 p. m. sharp. Dancing bathing, sailing, and crabbing, also a band concert.

The Fats and Leans of the Bindery played a game of baseball last Saturday week at Radford Park, First and P streets northwest. The score was 16 to 3 in favor of the Fats. Maj.-Gen. Mickalini Dunn was umpire. His decisions were so rank and the protests so loud that a number of policemen attended the game without invites. Kukart was a better fence climber than a player. Quinlan's acrobatic work was very fine. McCarty's sprinting surprised his wife. Corrigan was the star hitter and fielder. Benker and Neil accepted seven chances and were heroes. Bill Reese was noted for his good wind. Jake Weidman's movements were slow. Duffy, Chute, and Bergerson are parlor players. Refreshments were served after the game.
